

Workers of all countries, unite!

VKS GmbH
Postfach 10 20 51
63020 Offenbach
1. Auflage 1997
ISBN 978-3-932636-07-3

Karl Marx
Frederick Engels

Manifesto of the Communist Party

Verlag Olga Benario und Herbert Baum

NOTE OF THE FOREIGN LANGUAGES PRESS
PEKING 1965

The present English edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party is a reproduction of the translation made by Samuel Moore in 1888 from the original German text of 1848 and edited by Frederick Engels. Included are Engels' annotations for the English edition of 1888 and the German edition of 1890 as well as all the authors' prefaces to the various editions, the last being reprinted, with some changes in translation, from various English editions.

The footnotes and the notes at the end of the book are based on those given in the German and Chinese editions.

MANIFESTO OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY¹

Written between December 1847
and January 1848

Original in German

First published as a pamphlet in London in February 1848

PREFACE TO THE GERMAN
EDITION OF 1872²

The Communist League, an international association of workers, which could of course be only a secret one under the conditions obtaining at the time, commissioned the undersigned, at the Congress held in London in November 1847, to draw up for publication a detailed theoretical and practical programme of the Party. Such was the origin of the following Manifesto, the manuscript of which travelled to London, to be printed, a few weeks before the February Revolution.³ First published in German, it has been republished in that language in at least twelve different editions in Germany, England and America. It was published in English for the first time in 1850 in The Red Republican,⁴ London, translated by Miss Helen Macfarlane, and in 1871 in at least three different translations in America. A French version first appeared in Paris shortly before the June insurrection of 1848, and recently in *Le Socialiste*⁵ of New York. A new translation is in the course of preparation. A Polish version appeared in London shortly after it was first published in German. A Russian translation was published in Geneva in the sixties. Into Danish, too, it was translated shortly after its first appearance.

However much the state of things may have altered during the last twenty-five years, the general principles laid down in this Manifesto are, on the whole, as correct today as ever. Here and there some detail might be improved. The practical application of the principles will depend, as the Manifesto itself states, everywhere and at all times, on the historical conditions for the time being existing, and, for that reason, no special stress is laid on the revolutionary measures proposed at the end of Section II. That passage would, in many respects, be very differently worded today. In view of the gigantic strides of modern industry in the last twenty-five years, and of the accompanying improved and extended party organisation of the working class, in view of the practical experience gained, first in the February Revolution, and then, still more, in the Paris Commune, where the proletariat for the first time held political power for two whole months, this programme has in some details become antiquated. One thing especially was proved by the Commune, viz., that "the working class cannot simply lay hold of the ready-made State machinery, and wield it for its own purposes." (See The Civil War in France; Address of the General Council of the International Working Men's Association, London, Truelove, 1871, p. 15, where this point is further developed.)⁶ Further, it is self-evident that the criticism of Socialist literature is deficient in relation to the present time, because it comes down only to 1847; also, that the remarks on the relation of the Communists to the various opposition parties (Section IV), although in principle still correct, yet in practice are antiquated, because the political situation has been entirely changed, and the progress of history has swept from off the earth the greater portion of the political parties there enumerated.

But then, the Manifesto has become a historical document which we have no longer any right to alter. A subsequent edition may perhaps appear with an introduction bridging the gap from 1847 to the present day; the present reprint was too unexpected to leave us time for that.

Karl Marx Frederick Engels

London, June 24, 1872

PREFACE TO THE RUSSIAN
EDITION OF 1882⁷

The first Russian edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party, translated by Bakunin, was published early in the sixties⁸ by the printing office of the Kolokol.⁹ Then the West could see in it (the Russian edition of the Manifesto) only a literary curiosity. Such a view would be impossible today.

What a limited field the proletarian movement still occupied at that time (December 1847) is most clearly shown by the last section of the Manifesto: the position of the Communists in relation to the various opposition parties in the various countries. Precisely Russia and the United States are missing here. It was the time when Russia constituted the last great reserve of all European reaction, when the United States absorbed the surplus proletarian forces of Europe through immigration. Both countries provided Europe with raw materials and were at the same time markets for the sale of its industrial products. At that time both were, therefore, in one way or another, pillars of the existing European order.

How very different today! Precisely European immigration fitted North America for a gigantic agricultural production, whose competition is shaking the very foundations of European landed property — large and small. In addition it enabled the United States to exploit its tremendous industrial resources with an energy and on a scale that must shortly break the industrial monopoly of Western Europe, and especially of England, existing up to now. Both circumstances react in a revolutionary manner upon America itself. Step by step the small and middle land ownership of the farmers, the basis of the whole political constitution, is succumbing to the competition of giant farms; simultaneously, a mass proletariat and a fabulous concentration of capital are developing for the first time in the industrial regions.

And now Russia! During the Revolution of 1848-49 not only the European princes, but the European bourgeois as well, found their only salvation from the proletariat, just beginning to awaken, in Russian intervention. The Czar was proclaimed the chief of European reaction. Today he is a prisoner of war of the revolution, in Gatchina,¹⁰ and Russia forms the vanguard of revolutionary action in Europe.

The Communist Manifesto had as its object the proclamation of the inevitably impending dissolution of modern bourgeois property. But in Russia we find, face to face with the rapidly developing capitalist swindle and bourgeois landed property, just beginning to develop, more than half the land owned in common by the peasants. Now the question is: Can the Russian obshchina,* though greatly undermined, yet a form of the primaeval common ownership of land, pass directly to the higher form of Communist common ownership? Or on the contrary, must it first pass through the same process of dissolution as constitutes the historical evolution of the West?

* Village community.

The only answer to that possible today is this: If the Russian Revolution becomes the signal for a proletarian revolution in the West, so that both complement each other, the present Russian common ownership of land may serve as the starting point for a Communist development.

Karl Marx F. Engels

London, January 21, 1882

PREFACE TO THE GERMAN
EDITION OF 1883¹¹

The preface to the present edition I must, alas, sign alone. Marx, the man to whom the whole working class of Europe and America owes more than to anyone else, rests at Highgate Cemetery and over his grave the first grass is already growing. Since his death, there can be even less thought of revising or supplementing the Manifesto. All the more do I consider it necessary again to state here the following expressly:

The basic thought running through the Manifesto — that economic production and the structure of society of every historical epoch necessarily arising therefrom constitute the foundation for the political and intellectual history of that epoch; that consequently (ever since the dissolution of the primaeval communal ownership of land) all history has been a history of class struggles, of struggles between exploited and exploiting, between dominated and dominating classes at various stages of social development; that this struggle, however, has now reached a stage where the exploited and oppressed class (the proletariat) can no longer emancipate itself from the class which exploits and oppresses it (the bourgeoisie), without at the same time forever freeing the whole of society from exploitation, oppression and class struggles — this basic thought belongs solely and exclusively to Marx.*

I have already stated this many times; but precisely now is it necessary that it also stand in front of the Manifesto itself.

F. Engels

London, June 28, 1883

* "This proposition," I wrote in the preface to the English translation, "which, in my opinion, is destined to do for history what Darwin's theory has done for biology, we, both of us, had been gradually approaching for some years before 1845. How far I had independently progressed towards it, is best shown by my Condition of the Working Class in England. But when I again met Marx at Brussels, in spring, 1845, he had it already worked out, and put it before me, in terms almost as clear as those in which I have stated it here." [Note by Engels to the German edition of 1890.]

PREFACE TO THE ENGLISH EDITION OF 1838

The Manifesto was published as the platform of the Communist League, a working men's association, first exclusively German, later on international, and, under the political conditions of the Continent before 1848, unavoidably a secret society. At a Congress of the League, held in London in November 1847, Marx and Engels were commissioned to prepare for publication a complete theoretical and practical party programme. Drawn up in German, in January 1848, the manuscript was sent to the printer in London a few weeks before the French Revolution of February 24th. A French translation was brought out in Paris, shortly before the insurrection of June 1848. The first English translation, by Miss Helen Macfarlane, appeared in George Julian Harney's Red Republican, London, 1850. A Danish and a Polish edition had also been published.

The defeat of the Parisian insurrection of June 1848 — the first great battle between proletariat and bourgeoisie — drove again into the background, for a time, the social and political aspirations of the European working class. Thenceforth, the struggle for supremacy was again, as it had been before the Revolution of February, solely between different sections of the propertied class; the working class was reduced to a fight for political elbow-room, and to the position of extreme wing of the middle-class Radicals. Wherever independent proletarian movements continued to show signs of life, they were ruthlessly hunted down. Thus the Prussian police hunted out the Central Board of the Communist League, then located in Cologne. The members were arrested, and, after eighteen months' imprisonment, they were tried in October 1852. This celebrated "Cologne Communist Trial"¹² lasted from October 4th till November 12th; seven of the prisoners were sentenced to terms of imprisonment in a fortress, varying from three to six years. Immediately after the sentence, the League was formally dissolved by the remaining members. As to the Manifesto, it seemed thenceforth to be doomed to oblivion.

When the European working class had recovered sufficient strength for another attack on the ruling classes, the International Working Men's Association sprang up. But this association, formed with the express aim of welding into one body the whole militant proletariat of Europe and America, could not at once proclaim the principles laid down in the Manifesto. The International was bound to have a programme broad enough to be acceptable to the English trades' unions, to the followers of Proudhon in France, Belgium, Italy and Spain, and to the Lassalleans* in Germany. Marx, who drew up this programme to the satisfaction of all parties, entirely trusted to the intellectual development of the working class, which was sure to result from combined action and mutual discussion. The very events and vicissitudes of the struggle against capital, the defeats even more than the victories, could not help bringing home to men's minds the insufficiency of their various favourite nostrums, and preparing the way for a more complete insight into the true conditions of working-class emancipation. And Marx was right. The International, on its breaking up in 1874, left the workers quite different men from what it had found them in 1864. Proudhonism in France, Lassalleanism in Germany were dying out, and even the conservative English trades' unions, though most of them had long since severed their connexion with the International, were gradually advancing towards that point at which, last year at Swansea, their president could say in their name, "Continental Socialism has lost its terrors for us."¹³ In fact, the principles of the Manifesto had made considerable headway among the working men of all countries.

* Lassalle personally, to us, always acknowledged himself to be a disciple of Marx, and, as such, stood on the ground of the Manifesto. But in his public agitation, 1862-64, he did not go beyond demanding co-operative workshops supported by State credit. [Note by Engels.]

The Manifesto itself thus came to the front again. The German text had been, since 1850, reprinted several times in Switzerland, England and America. In 1872, it was translated into English in New York, where the translation was published in Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly.¹⁴ From this English version, a French one was made in Le Socialiste of New York. Since then at least two more English translations, more or less mutilated, have been brought out in America, and one of them has been reprinted in England. The first Russian translation, made by Bakunin, was published at Herzen's Kolokol office in Geneva, about 1863; a second one, by the heroic Vera Zasulich,¹⁵ also in Geneva in 1882. A new Danish edition¹⁶ is to be found in Socialdemokratisk Bibliothek, Copenhagen, 1885; a fresh French translation in Le Socialiste, Paris, 1886.¹⁷ From this latter a Spanish version was prepared and published in Madrid in 1886.¹⁸ The German reprints are not to be counted; there have been twelve altogether at the least. An Armenian translation, which was to be published in Constantinople some months ago, did not see the light, I am told, because the publisher was afraid of bringing out a book with the name of Marx on it, while the translator declined to call it his own production. Of further translations into other languages I have heard, but have not seen them. Thus the history of the Manifesto reflects, to a great extent, the history of the modern working-class movement; at present it is undoubtedly the most widespread, the most international production of all Socialist literature, the common platform acknowledged by millions of working men from Siberia to California.

Yet, when it was written, we could not have called it a Socialist manifesto. By Socialists, in 1847, were understood, on the one hand, the adherents of the various Utopian systems: Owenites in England, Fourierists in France, both of them already reduced to the position of mere sects, and gradually dying out; on the other hand, the most multifarious social quacks, who, by all manner of tinkering, professed to redress, without any danger to capital and profit, all sorts of social grievances — in both cases men outside the working-class movement, and looking rather to the “educated” classes for support. Whatever portion of the working class had become convinced of the insufficiency of mere political revolutions, and had proclaimed the necessity of a total social change, called itself Communist. It was a crude, rough-hewn, purely instinctive sort of Communism; still, it touched the cardinal point and was powerful enough amongst the working class to produce the Utopian Communism, of Cabet in France, and of Weitling in Germany. Thus, Socialism was, in 1847, a middle-class movement, Communism a working-class movement. Socialism was, on the Continent at least, "respectable"; Communism was the very opposite. And as our notion, from the very beginning, was that "the emancipation of the working class must be the act of the working class itself,"¹⁹ there could be no doubt as to which of the two names we must take. Moreover, we have, ever since, been far from repudiating it.

The Manifesto being our joint production, I consider myself bound to state that the fundamental proposition, which forms its nucleus, belongs to Marx. That proposition is: That in every historical epoch, the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, and the social organisation necessarily following from it, form the basis upon which is built up, and from which alone can be explained, the political and intellectual history of that epoch; that consequently the whole history of mankind (since the dissolution of primitive tribal society, holding land in common ownership) has been a history of class struggles, contests between exploiting and exploited, ruling and oppressed classes; that the history of these class struggles forms a series of evolutions in which, nowadays, a stage has been reached where the exploited and oppressed class — the proletariat — cannot attain its emancipation from the sway of the exploiting and ruling class — the bourgeoisie — without, at the same time, and once and for all, emancipating society at large from all exploitation, oppression, class distinctions and class struggles.

This proposition which, in my opinion, is destined to do for history what Darwin's theory has done for biology, we, both of us, had been gradually approaching for some years before 1845. How far I had independently progressed towards it, is best shown by my Condition of the Working Class in England.* But when I again met Marx at Brussels, in spring, 1845, he had it already worked out, and put it before me, in terms almost as clear as those in which I have stated it here.

From our joint preface to the German edition of 1872, I quote the following:

“However much the state of things may have altered during the last twenty-five years, the general principles laid down in this Manifesto are, on the whole, as correct today as ever. Here and there some detail might be improved. The practical application of the principles will depend, as the Manifesto itself states, everywhere and at all times, on the historical conditions for the time being existing, and, for that reason, no special stress is laid on the revolutionary measures proposed at the end of Section II. That passage would, in many respects, be very differently worded today. In view of the gigantic strides of modern industry since 1848, and of the accompanying improved and extended organisation of the working class,²⁰ in view of the practical experience gained, first in the February Revolution, and then, still more, in the Paris Commune, where the proletariat for the first time held political power for two whole months, this programme has in some details become antiquated. One thing especially was proved by the Commune, viz., that ‘the working class cannot simply lay hold of the ready-made State machinery, and wield it for its own purposes.’ (See The Civil War in France; Address of the General Council of the International Working Men’s Association, London, Truelove, 1871, p. 15, where this point is further developed.)⁶ Further, it is self-evident that the criticism of Socialist literature is deficient in relation to the present time, because it comes down only to 1847; also, that the remarks on the relation of the Communists to the various opposition parties (Section IV), although in principle still correct, yet in practice are antiquated, because the political situation has been entirely changed, and the progress of history has swept from off the earth the greater portion of the political parties there enumerated.

* The Condition of the Working Class in England in 1844. By Frederick Engels. Translated by Florence K. Wischnewetzky, New York, Lovell—London, W. Reeves, 1888. [Note by Engels.]

“But then, the Manifesto has become a historical document which we have no longer any right to alter.”

The present translation is by Mr. Samuel Moore, the translator of the greater portion of Marx's Capital. We have revised it in common, and I have added a few notes explanatory of historical allusions.

Frederick Engels

London, January 30th, 1888

PREFACE TO THE GERMAN
EDITION OF 1890²¹

Since the above was written,²² a new German edition of the Manifesto has again become necessary, and much has also happened to the Manifesto which should be recorded here.

A second Russian translation — by Vera Zaslulich — appeared at Geneva in 1882; the preface to that edition was written by Marx and myself. Unfortunately, the original German manuscript has gone astray; I must therefore re-translate from the Russian, which will in no way improve the text.²³ It reads:

“The first Russian edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party, in Bakunin’s translation, was published early in the sixties by the printing office of the Kolokol. At that date a Russian edition of the Manifesto had for the West the significance, at most, of a literary curiosity. Today such a view is no longer possible. How limited the area of the spread of the proletarian movement was at the time the Manifesto was first published (January 1848) is best shown by the last section, ‘Position of the Communists in Relation to the Various Existing Opposition Parties.’ Russia and the United States above all are missing here. It was the time when Russia constituted the last great reserve of European reaction and when immigration to the United States absorbed the surplus forces of the European proletariat. Both countries provided Europe with raw materials, and served at the same time as markets for the sale of its industrial products. Both appeared therefore, in one way or another, as pillars of the European social order.

“What a change has taken place since then! It is precisely European immigration that has made possible the gigantic growth of agriculture in North America, which through its competition is shaking the very foundations of great and small landed property in Europe. At the same time it enabled the United States to begin the exploitation of its abundant industrial resources, and with such energy and on such a scale that in a short time it must put an end to the industrial monopoly of Western Europe. These two circumstances react in turn upon America in a revolutionary sense. More and more the small and middle land ownership of the independent farmers, the basis of the whole political system of America, is succumbing to the competition of giant farms, while simultaneously a numerous proletariat is emerging for the first time in the industrial regions alongside a fabulous concentration of capital.

“Let us now turn to Russia. At the time of the Revolution of 1848-49, not only the European monarchs, but the European bourgeois as well, looked upon Russian intervention as the only salvation from the proletariat, then for the first time becoming aware of its own strength. The Czar was acclaimed the leader of European reaction. Today he sits in Gatchina, a prisoner of war of the revolution, and Russia forms the vanguard of the revolutionary movement in Europe.

"The object of The Communist Manifesto was to proclaim the inevitable impending downfall of present-day bourgeois property. But in Russia we find — side by side with the feverishly growing capitalist system and the bourgeois land ownership just beginning to take shape — more than half the land owned in common by the peasants.

"Now the question is: Can the Russian peasant community, this form of primaeval common ownership of land, although already very much disintegrated, pass directly to a higher Communist form of land ownership, or must it first pass through the same process of dissolution represented in the historical evolution of the West?

"The only answer to this question possible today is the following. If the Russian Revolution becomes the signal for a workers' revolution in the West, so that both complement each other, the present Russian common ownership of land may then serve as the starting point for a Communist development.

"Karl Marx Frederick Engels

"London, January 21, 1882"

At about the same date, a new Polish version appeared in Geneva: Manifest Komunistyczny.

Furthermore, a new Danish translation has appeared in the Socialdemokratisk Bibliotek, Copenhagen, 1885. Unfortunately it is not quite complete; certain essential passages, which seem to have presented difficulties to the translator, have been omitted, and in addition there are signs of carelessness here and there, which are all the more unpleasantly conspicuous since the translation indicates that had the translator taken a little more pains he would have done an excellent piece of work.

A new French version appeared in 1886 in Le Socialiste of Paris; it is the best published to date.

From this latter a Spanish version was published the same year in El Socialista of Madrid, and then re-issued in pamphlet form: Manifiesto del Partido Comunista por Carlos Marx y F. Engels, Madrid, Administración de El Socialista, Hernán Cortés 8.

As a matter of curiosity I may mention that in 1887 the manuscript of an Armenian translation was offered to a publisher in Constantinople. But the good man did not have the courage to publish something bearing the name of Marx and suggested that the translator set down his own name as author, which the latter, however, declined.

After one and then another of the more or less inaccurate American translations had been repeatedly reprinted in England, an authentic version at last appeared in 1888. This was by my friend Samuel Moore, and we went through it together once more before it was sent to press. It is entitled: Manifesto of the Communist Party, by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels. Authorized English translation, edited and annotated by Frederick Engels, 1888, London, William Reeves, 185 Fleet St., E.C. I have added some of the notes of that edition to the present one.

The Manifesto has had a history of its own. Greeted with enthusiasm, at the time of its appearance, by the then still not at all numerous vanguard of scientific Socialism (as is proved by the translations mentioned in the first preface), it was soon forced into the background by the reaction that began with the defeat of the Paris workers in June 1848, and was finally excommunicated "according to law" by the conviction of the Cologne Communists in November 1852.¹² With the disappearance from the public scene of the workers' movement that had begun with the February Revolution, the Manifesto too passed into the background.

When the working class of Europe had again gathered sufficient strength for a new onslaught upon the power of the ruling classes, the International Working Men's Association came into being. Its aim was to weld together into one huge army the whole militant working class of Europe and America. Therefore it could not set out from the principles laid down in the Manifesto. It was bound to have a programme which would not shut the door on the English trades' unions, the French, Belgian, Italian and Spanish Proudhonists and the German Lassalleans.* This programme — the preamble to the Rules of the International — was drawn up by Marx with a master hand acknowledged even by Bakunin and the anarchists. For the ultimate triumph of the ideas set forth in the Manifesto Marx relied solely and exclusively upon the intellectual development of the working class, as it necessarily had to ensue from united action and discussion. The events and vicissitudes in the struggle against capital, the defeats even more than the successes, could not but demonstrate to the fighters the inadequacy of the universal panaceas they had hitherto sworn by and make their minds more receptive to a thorough understanding of the true conditions for the emancipation of the workers. And Marx was right. The working class of 1874, at the dissolution of the International, was altogether different from that of 1864, at its foundation. Proudhonism in the Latin countries and the specific Lassalleanism in Germany were dying out, and even the then arch-conservative English trades' unions were gradually approaching the point where in 1887 the chairman of their Swansea Congress could say in their name: "Continental Socialism has lost its terrors for us." Yet by 1887 Continental Socialism was almost exclusively the theory heralded in the Manifesto. Thus, to a certain extent, the history of the Manifesto reflects the history of the modern working-class movement since 1848. At present it is doubtless the most widely circulated, the most international product of all Socialist literature, the common programme of many millions of workers of all countries, from Siberia to California.

* Lassalle personally, to us, always acknowledged himself to be a "disciple" of Marx, and, as such, stood, of course, on the ground of the Manifesto. Matters were quite different with regard to those of his followers who did not go beyond his demand for producers' co-operatives supported by State credits and who divided the whole working class into supporters of State assistance and supporters of self-assistance. [Note by Engels.]

Nevertheless, when it appeared we could not have called it a Socialist manifesto. In 1847 two kinds of people were considered Socialists. On the one hand were the adherents of the various Utopian systems, notably the Owenites in England and the Fourierists in France, both of whom at that date had already dwindled to mere sects gradually dying out. On the other, the manifold types of social quacks who wanted to eliminate social abuses through their various universal panaceas and all kinds of patchwork, without hurting capital and profit in the least. In both cases, they were people who stood outside the labour movement and who looked for support rather to the "educated" classes. The section of the working class, however, which demanded a radical reconstruction of society, convinced that mere political revolutions were not enough, then called itself Communist. It was still a rough-hewn, only instinctive, and frequently somewhat crude Communism. Yet it was powerful enough to bring into being two systems of Utopian Communism — in France the “Icarian” Communism of Cabet, and in Germany that of Weitling. Socialism in 1847 signified a bourgeois movement, Communism a working-class movement. Socialism was, on the Continent at least, quite respectable, whereas Communism was the very opposite. And since we were very decidedly of the opinion as early as then that “the emancipation of the workers must be the act of the working class itself,”¹⁹ we could have no hesitation as to which of the two names we should choose. Nor has it ever occurred to us since to repudiate it.

“Working men of all countries, unite!” But few voices responded when we proclaimed these words to the world forty-two years ago, on the eve of the first Paris Revolution in which the proletariat came out with demands of its own. On September 28, 1864, however, the proletarians of most of the Western European countries joined hands in the International Working Men’s Association of glorious memory. True, the International itself lived only nine years. But that the eternal union of the proletarians of all countries created by it is still alive and lives stronger than ever, there is no better witness than this day. Because today, as I write these lines, the European and American proletariat is reviewing its fighting forces, mobilised for the first time, mobilised as one army, under one flag, for one immediate aim: the standard eight-hour working day to be established by legal enactment, as proclaimed by the Geneva Congress of the International in 1866, and again by the Paris Workers’ Congress in 1889.²⁴ And today’s spectacle will open the eyes of the capitalists and landlords of all countries to the fact that today the working men of all countries are united indeed.

If only Marx were still by my side to see this with his own eyes!

F. Engels

London, May 1, 1890

PREFACE TO THE POLISH
EDITION OF 1892²⁵

The fact that a new Polish edition of The Communist Manifesto has become necessary gives rise to various thoughts.

First of all, it is noteworthy that of late the Manifesto has become an index, as it were, of the development of large-scale industry on the European continent. In proportion as large-scale industry expands in a given country, the demand grows among the workers of that country for enlightenment regarding their position as the working class in relation to the possessing classes, the Socialist movement spreads among them and the demand for the Manifesto increases. Thus, not only the state of the labour movement but also the degree of development of large-scale industry can be measured with fair accuracy in every country by the number of copies of the Manifesto circulated in the language of that country.

Accordingly, the new Polish edition indicates a decided progress of Polish industry. And there can be no doubt whatever that this progress has actually taken place since the previous edition published ten years ago. Russian Poland, Congress Poland,²⁶ has become the big industrial region of the Russian Empire. Whereas Russian large-scale industry is scattered sporadically — a part round the Gulf of Finland, another in the centre (Moscow and Vladimir), a third along the coasts of the Black and Azov Seas, and still others elsewhere — Polish industry has been packed into a relatively small area and enjoys both the advantages and the disadvantages arising from such concentration. The competing Russian manufacturers acknowledged the advantages when they demanded protective tariffs against Poland, in spite of their ardent desire to transform the Poles into Russians. The disadvantages — for the Polish manufacturers and the Russian government — are manifest in the rapid spread of Socialist ideas among the Polish workers and in the growing demand for the Manifesto.

But the rapid development of Polish industry, outstripping that of Russia, is in its turn a new proof of the inexhaustible vitality of the Polish people and a new guarantee of its impending national restoration. And the restoration of an independent strong Poland is a matter which concerns not only the Poles but all of us. A sincere international collaboration of the European nations is possible only if each of these nations is fully autonomous in its own house. The Revolution of 1848, which under the banner of the proletariat, after all, merely let the proletarian fighters do the work of the bourgeoisie, also secured the independence of Italy, Germany and Hungary through its testamentary executors, Louis Bonaparte and Bismarck; but Poland, which since 1792 had done more for the revolution than all these three together, was left to its own resources when it succumbed in 1863 to a tenfold greater Russian force. The nobility could neither maintain nor regain Polish independence; today, to the bourgeoisie, this independence is, to say the least, immaterial. Nevertheless, it is a necessity for the harmonious collaboration of the European nations. It can be gained only by the young Polish proletariat, and in its hands it is secure. For the workers of all the rest of Europe need the independence of Poland just as much as the Polish workers themselves.

P. Engels

London, February 10, 1892

PREFACE TO THE ITALIAN
EDITION OF 1893²⁷

To the Italian Reader

The publication of the Manifesto of the Communist Party coincided exactly, one may say, with March 18, 1848, the date of the revolutions in Milan and Berlin, which were armed uprisings of two centrally located nations — one in the centre of the continent of Europe, the other of the Mediterranean; two nations which up till then had been enfeebled by territorial division and internal strife, and had thus fallen under foreign domination. While Italy became subject to the Emperor of Austria, Germany was under the yoke of the Czar of all the Russians, a yoke not so direct but nonetheless palpable. The consequences of the events of March 18 freed both Italy and Germany from this disgrace; if these two great nations were reconstituted between 1848 and 1871 and could recover, in one way or another, their independence, that was, as Karl Marx said, because the very people who had suppressed the Revolution of 1848 became, in spite of themselves, the executors of its testament.²⁸

Everywhere this revolution was the work of the working class: it was the working class that built the barricades and risked their lives. However, only the Parisian workers had the very definite intention of overthrowing the bourgeois regime, when they overthrew the government. But as much as they were conscious of the inevitable antagonism existing between their own class and the bourgeoisie, neither the economic progress of the country nor the intellectual development of the mass of French workers had as yet reached the stage which would have made a social reconstruction possible. As an end result, therefore, the fruits of the revolution were reaped by the capitalist class. In other countries — Italy, Germany and Austria — the workers from the very outset did nothing but help the bourgeoisie to power. But in no country is the rule of the bourgeoisie possible without national independence. The Revolution of 1848, therefore, must needs bring in its train the unity and independence of those nations which heretofore did not possess it: Italy, Germany and Hungary. It is Poland's turn now.

If, then, the Revolution of 1848 was no Socialist revolution, it still paved the way for the latter and prepared the ground for it. Through its impetus given to large-scale industry in all countries, the bourgeois regime has during the last forty-five years created a numerous, consolidated and powerful proletariat everywhere. In this way, it has created, to use an expression of the Manifesto, its own grave-diggers. Without re-establishing the unity and independence of each nation, neither the international unity of the proletariat nor the peaceful and reasonable collaboration of these nations towards common aims could have come about. Just try to imagine a joint international action of the Italian, Hungarian, German, Polish and Russian workers under the political conditions of the period before 1848!

The battles of 1848 were thus not fought in vain. Nor have the forty-five years which separate us from that revolutionary epoch passed to no purpose. The fruits are ripening, and all I wish is that the publication of this Italian translation may augur as well for the victory of the Italian proletariat as the publication of the original did for the international revolution.

The Manifesto does full justice to the revolutionary role played by capitalism in the past. Italy was the first capitalist nation. The close of the feudal Middle Ages and the dawn of the modern capitalist era was marked by a colossal figure. It was an Italian, Dante, who was, at one and the same time, the last poet of the Middle Ages and the first poet of modern times. Today, as in 1300, a new historical era is approaching. Will Italy give us another Dante, who will mark the hour of birth of this new, proletarian era?

Frederick Engels

London, February 1, 1893

Manifeste

der

Kommunistischen Partei.

Veröffentlicht im Februar 1848.

London.

Gedruckt in der Office der „Bildungs-Gesellschaft für Arbeiter“ von J. W. Burgard.

46, LIVERPOOL STREET, BISHOPSGATE.

Title-page of the first edition of the
Manifesto of the Communist Party

MANIFESTO OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY

A spectre is haunting Europe — the spectre of Communism. All the Powers of old Europe have entered into a holy alliance to exorcise this spectre: Pope and Czar, Metternich and Guizot, French Radicals and German police-spies.

Where is the party in opposition that has not been decried as Communistic by its opponents in power? Where is the Opposition that has not hurled back the branding reproach of Communism, against the more advanced opposition parties, as well as against its reactionary adversaries?

Two things result from this fact:

I. Communism is already acknowledged by all European Powers to be itself a Power.

II. It is high time that Communists should openly, in the face of the whole world, publish their views, their aims, their tendencies, and meet this nursery tale of the Spectre of Communism with a Manifesto of the party itself.

To this end, Communists of various nationalities have assembled in London, and sketched the following Manifesto, to be published in the English, French, German, Italian, Flemish and Danish languages.

I

BOURGEOIS AND PROLETARIANS*

The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles.

Freeman and slave, patrician and plebeian, lord and serf, guild-master and journeyman, in a word, oppressor and oppressed, stood in constant opposition to one another, carried on an uninterrupted, now hidden, now open fight, a fight that

* By bourgeoisie is meant the class of modern capitalists, owners of the means of social production and employers of wage-labour. By proletariat, the class of modern wage-labourers who, having no means of production of their own, are reduced to selling their labour power in order to live. [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

 That is, all written history. In 1847, the pre-history of society, the social organisation existing previous to recorded history, was all but unknown. Since then, Haxthausen discovered common ownership of land in Russia, Maurer proved it to be the social foundation from which all Teutonic races started in history, and by and by, village communities were found to be, or to have been, the primitive form of society everywhere from India to Ireland. The inner organisation of this primitive Communistic society was laid bare, in its typical form, by Morgan's crowning discovery of the true nature of the gens and its relation to the tribe. With the dissolution of these primaeval communities, society begins to be differentiated into separate and finally antagonistic classes. I have attempted to retrace this process of dissolution in Der Ursprung der Familie, des Privateigentums und des Staats [The Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State], 2nd edition, Stuttgart, 1886. [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

 Guild-master, that is, a full member of a guild, a master within, not a head of, a guild. [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

each time ended, either in a revolutionary reconstitution of society at large, or in the common ruin of the contending classes.

In the earlier epochs of history, we find almost everywhere a complicated arrangement of society into various orders, a manifold gradation of social rank. In ancient Rome we have patricians, knights, plebeians, slaves; in the Middle Ages, feudal lords, vassals, guild-masters, journeymen, apprentices, serfs; in almost all of these classes, again, subordinate gradations.

The modern bourgeois society that has sprouted from the ruins of feudal society has not done away with class antagonisms. It has but established new classes, new conditions of oppression, new forms of struggle in place of the old ones.

Our epoch, the epoch of the bourgeoisie, possesses, however, this distinctive feature: it has simplified the class antagonisms. Society as a whole is more and more splitting up into two great hostile camps, into two great classes directly facing each other: Bourgeoisie and Proletariat.

From the serfs of the Middle Ages sprang the chartered burghers of the earliest towns. From these burgesses the first elements of the bourgeoisie were developed.

The discovery of America, the rounding of the Cape, opened up fresh ground for the rising bourgeoisie. The East-Indian and Chinese markets, the colonisation of America, trade with the colonies, the increase in the means of exchange and in commodities generally, gave to commerce, to navigation, to industry, an impulse never before known, and thereby, to the revolutionary element in the tottering feudal society, a rapid development.

The feudal system of industry, under which industrial production was monopolised by closed guilds, now no longer sufficed for the growing wants of the new markets. The manufacturing system took its place. The guild-masters were pushed on one side by the manufacturing middle class; division of labour between the different corporate guilds vanished in the face of division of labour in each single workshop.

Meantime the markets kept ever growing, the demand ever rising. Even manufacture no longer sufficed. Thereupon, steam and machinery revolutionised industrial production. The place of manufacture was taken by the giant, modern industry, the place of the industrial middle class, by industrial millionaires, the leaders of whole industrial armies, the modern bourgeois.

Modern industry has established the world market, for which the discovery of America paved the way. This market has given an immense development to commerce, to navigation, to communication by land. This development has, in its turn, reacted on the extension of industry; and in proportion as industry, commerce, navigation, railways extended, in the same proportion the bourgeoisie developed, increased its capital, and pushed into the background every class handed down from the Middle Ages.

We see, therefore, how the modern bourgeoisie is itself the product of a long course of development, of a series of revolutions in the modes of production and of exchange.

Each step in the development of the bourgeoisie was accompanied by a corresponding political advance of that class.* An oppressed class under the sway of the feudal nobility, an armed and self-governing association in the mediaeval commune;* here independent urban republic (as in Italy and Germany); there taxable "third estate" of the monarchy (as in France); afterwards, in the period of manufacture proper, serving either the semi-feudal or the absolute monarchy as a counterpoise against the nobility, and, in fact, corner-stone of the great monarchies in general, the bourgeoisie has at last, since the establishment of modern industry and of the world market, conquered for itself, in the modern representative State, exclusive political sway. The executive of the modern State is but a committee for managing the common affairs of the whole bourgeoisie.

* In the German original (the 1848 edition), the words "political advance of that class" read "political advance."

The bourgeoisie, historically, has played a most revolutionary part.

The bourgeoisie, wherever it has got the upper hand, has put an end to all feudal, patriarchal, idyllic relations. It has pitilessly torn asunder the motley feudal ties that bound man to his "natural superiors," and has left remaining no other nexus between man and man than naked self-interest, than callous "cash payment." It has drowned the most heavenly ecstasies of religious fervour, of chivalrous enthusiasm, of philistine sentimentalism, in the icy water of egotistical

* "Commune" was the name taken, in France, by the nascent towns even before they had conquered from their feudal lords and masters local self-government and political rights as the "third estate." Generally speaking, for the economical development of the bourgeoisie, England is here taken as the typical country; for its political development, France. [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

This was the name given their urban communities by the townsmen of Italy and France, after they had purchased or wrested their initial rights of self-government from their feudal lords. [Note by Engels to the German edition of 1890.]

 The words "(as in Italy and Germany)" are not in the German original.

 The words "(as in France)" are not in the German original.

calculation. It has resolved personal worth into exchange value, and in place of the numberless indefeasible chartered freedoms, has set up that single, unconscionable freedom — Free Trade. In one word, for exploitation, veiled by religious and political illusions, it has substituted naked, shameless, direct, brutal exploitation.

The bourgeoisie has stripped of its halo every occupation hitherto honoured and looked up to with reverent awe. It has converted the physician, the lawyer, the priest, the poet, the man of science, into its paid wage-labourers.

The bourgeoisie has torn away from the family its sentimental veil, and has reduced the family relation to a mere money relation.

The bourgeoisie has disclosed how it came to pass that the brutal display of vigour in the Middle Ages, which Reactionists so much admire, found its fitting complement in the most slothful indolence. It has been the first to show what man's activity can bring about. It has accomplished wonders far surpassing Egyptian pyramids, Roman aqueducts, and Gothic cathedrals; it has conducted expeditions that put in the shade all former exoduses of nations and crusades.

The bourgeoisie cannot exist without constantly revolutionising the instruments of production, and thereby the relations of production, and with them the whole relations of society. Conservation of the old modes of production in unaltered form, was, on the contrary, the first condition of existence for all earlier industrial classes. Constant revolutionising of production, uninterrupted disturbance of all social conditions, everlasting uncertainty and agitation distinguish the bourgeois epoch from all earlier ones.* All fixed, fast-frozen relations, with their train of ancient and venerable prejudices and opinions, are swept away, all new-formed ones become antiquated before they can ossify. All that is solid* melts into air, all that is holy is profaned, and man is at last compelled to face with sober senses his real conditions of life and his relations with his kind.

* In the German edition of 1890, the word "earlier" reads "other."

The need of a constantly expanding market for its products chases the bourgeoisie over the whole surface of the globe. It must nestle everywhere, settle everywhere, establish connexions everywhere.

The bourgeoisie has through its exploitation of the world market given a cosmopolitan character to production and consumption in every country. To the great chagrin of Reactionists, it has drawn from under the feet of industry the national ground on which it stood. All old-established national industries have been destroyed or are daily being destroyed. They are dislodged by new industries, whose introduction becomes a life and death question for all civilised nations, by industries that no longer work up indigenous raw material, but raw material drawn from the remotest zones; industries whose products are consumed, not only at home, but in every quarter of the globe. In place of the old wants, satisfied by the productions of the country, we find new wants, requiring for their satisfaction the products of distant lands and climes. In place of the old local and national seclusion and self-sufficiency, we have intercourse in every direction, universal inter-dependence of nations. And as in material, so also in intellectual production. The intellectual creations of individual nations become common property. National one-sidedness and narrow-mindedness become more and more impossible, and from the numerous national and local literatures there arises a world literature.

* In the German original, the word "solid" reads "privileged and established."

The bourgeoisie, by the rapid improvement of all instruments of production, by the immensely facilitated means of communication, draws all, even the most barbarian, nations into civilisation. The cheap prices of its commodities are the heavy artillery with which it batters down all Chinese walls, with which it forces the barbarians' intensely obstinate hatred of foreigners to capitulate. It compels all nations, on pain of extinction, to adopt the bourgeois mode of production; it compels them to introduce what it calls civilisation into their midst, i.e., to become bourgeois themselves. In one word, it creates a world after its own image.

The bourgeoisie has subjected the country to the rule of the towns. It has created enormous cities, has greatly increased the urban population as compared with the rural, and has thus rescued a considerable part of the population from the idiocy of rural life. Just as it has made the country dependent on the towns, so it has made barbarian and semi-barbarian countries dependent on the civilised ones, nations of peasants on nations of bourgeois, the East on the West.

The bourgeoisie keeps more and more doing away with the scattered state of the population, of the means of production, and of property. It has agglomerated population, centralised means of production, and has concentrated property in a few hands. The necessary consequence of this was political centralisation. Independent, or but loosely connected provinces, with separate interests, laws, governments and systems of taxation, became lumped together into one nation, with one government, one code of laws, one national class interest, one frontier and one customs tariff.

The bourgeoisie, during its rule of scarce one hundred years, has created more massive and more colossal productive forces than have all preceding generations together. Subjection of nature's forces to man, machinery, application of chemistry to industry and agriculture, steam-navigation, railways, electric telegraphs, clearing of whole continents for cultivation, canalisation of rivers, whole populations conjured out of the ground — what earlier century had even a presentiment that such productive forces slumbered in the lap of social labour?

We see then: the means of production and of exchange, on whose foundation the bourgeoisie built itself up, were generated in feudal society. At a certain stage in the development of these means of production and of exchange, the conditions under which feudal society produced and exchanged, the feudal organisation of agriculture and manufacturing industry, in one word, the feudal relations of property became no longer compatible with the already developed productive forces;* they became so many fetters. They had to be burst asunder; they were burst asunder.

Into their place stepped free competition, accompanied by a social and political constitution adapted to it, and by the economical and political sway of the bourgeois class.

A similar movement is going on before our own eyes. Modern bourgeois society with its relations of production, of exchange and of property, a society that has conjured up such gigantic means of production and of exchange, is like the sorcerer who is no longer able to control the powers of the nether world whom he has called up by his spells. For many a decade past the history of industry and commerce is but the history of the revolt of modern productive forces against modern conditions of production, against the property relations that are the conditions for the existence of the bourgeoisie and of its rule. It is enough to mention the commercial crises that by their periodical return put on its trial, each time more threateningly, the existence of the entire bourgeois society. In these crises a great part not only of the existing products, but also of the previously created productive forces, are periodically destroyed. In these crises there breaks out an epidemic that, in all earlier epochs, would have seemed an absurdity — the epidemic of over-production. Society suddenly finds itself put back into a state of momentary barbarism; it appears as if a famine, a universal war of devastation had cut off the supply of every means of subsistence; industry and commerce seem to be destroyed. And why? Because there is too much civilisation, too much means of subsistence, too much industry, too much commerce. The productive forces at the disposal of society no longer tend to further the development of the conditions of bourgeois property;* on the contrary, they have become too powerful for these conditions, by which they are fettered, and so soon as they overcome these fetters, they bring disorder into the whole of bourgeois society, endanger the existence of bourgeois property. The conditions of bourgeois society are too narrow to comprise the wealth created by them. And how does the bourgeoisie get over these crises? On the one hand by enforced destruction of a mass of productive forces; on the other, by the conquest of new markets, and by the more thorough exploitation of the old ones. That is to say, by paving the way for more extensive and more destructive crises, and by diminishing the means whereby crises are prevented.

* In the German original, the sentence ends here. Then follows: "They hindered production, instead of promoting it. They became so many fetters. . . ."

* In the German edition of 1848, the words "development of the conditions of bourgeois property" read "development of bourgeois civilisation and the conditions of bourgeois property." In the German editions of 1872, 1883 and 1890, the words "bourgeois civilisation and" are omitted.

The weapons with which the bourgeoisie felled feudalism to the ground are now turned against the bourgeoisie itself.

But not only has the bourgeoisie forged the weapons that bring death to itself; it has also called into existence the men who are to wield those weapons — the modern working class — the proletarians.

In proportion as the bourgeoisie, i.e., capital, is developed, in the same proportion is the proletariat, the modern working class, developed — a class of labourers, who live only so long as they find work, and who find work only so long as their labour increases capital. These labourers, who must sell themselves piecemeal, are a commodity, like every other article of commerce, and are consequently exposed to all the vicissitudes of competition, to all the fluctuations of the market.

Owing to the extensive use of machinery and to division of labour, the work of the proletarians has lost all individual character, and, consequently, all charm for the workman. He becomes an appendage of the machine, and it is only the most simple, most monotonous, and most easily acquired knack, that is required of him. Hence, the cost of production of a workman is restricted, almost entirely, to the means of subsistence that he requires for his maintenance, and for the propagation of his race. But the price of a commodity, and therefore also of labour,²⁰ is equal to its cost of production. In proportion, therefore, as the repulsiveness of the work increases, the wage decreases. Nay more, in proportion as the use of machinery and division of labour increases, in the same proportion the burden of toil also increases, whether by prolongation of the working hours, by increase of the work exacted in a given time, or by increased speed of the machinery, etc.

Modern industry has converted the little workshop of the patriarchal master into the great factory of the industrial capitalist. Masses of labourers, crowded into the factory, are organised like soldiers. As privates of the industrial army they are placed under the command of a perfect hierarchy of officers and sergeants. Not only are they slaves of the bourgeois class, and of the bourgeois State; they are daily and hourly enslaved by the machine, by the overlooker, and, above all, by the individual bourgeois manufacturer himself. The more openly this despotism proclaims gain to be its end and aim, the more petty, the more hateful and the more embittering it is.

The less the skill and exertion of strength implied in manual labour, in other words, the more modern industry becomes developed, the more is the labour of men superseded by that of women.* Differences of age and sex have no longer any distinctive social validity for the working class. All are instruments of labour, more or less expensive to use, according to their age and sex.

No sooner is the exploitation of the labourer by the manufacturer, so far at an end, that he receives his wages in cash, than he is set upon by the other portions of the bourgeoisie, the landlord, the shopkeeper, the pawnbroker, etc.

The lower strata of the middle class — the small tradespeople, shopkeepers, and retired tradesmen generally, the handicraftsmen and peasants — all these sink gradually into the proletariat, partly because their diminutive capital does not suffice for the scale on which modern industry is carried on, and is swamped in the competition with the large capitalists, partly because their specialised skill is rendered worthless by new methods of production. Thus the proletariat is recruited from all classes of the population.

* In the first German edition of February 1848, the words "superseded by that of women" read "superseded by that of women and children."

The proletariat goes through various stages of development. With its birth begins its struggle with the bourgeoisie. At first the contest is carried on by individual labourers, then by the workpeople of a factory, then by the operatives of one trade, in one locality, against the individual bourgeois who directly exploits them. They direct their attacks not against the bourgeois conditions of production, but against the instruments of production themselves;* they destroy imported wares that compete with their labour, they smash to pieces machinery, they set factories ablaze, they seek to restore by force the vanished status of the workman of the Middle Ages.

At this stage the labourers still form an incoherent mass scattered over the whole country, and broken up by their mutual competition. If anywhere they unite to form more compact bodies, this is not yet the consequence of their own active union, but of the union of the bourgeoisie, which class, in order to attain its own political ends, is compelled to set the whole proletariat in motion, and is moreover yet, for a time, able to do so. At this stage, therefore, the proletarians do not fight their enemies, but the enemies of their enemies, the remnants of absolute monarchy, the landowners, the non-industrial bourgeois, the petty bourgeoisie. Thus the whole historical movement is concentrated in the hands of the bourgeoisie; every victory so obtained is a victory for the bourgeoisie.

But with the development of industry the proletariat not only increases in number; it becomes concentrated in greater masses, its strength grows, and it feels that strength more. The various interests and conditions of life within the ranks of the proletariat are more and more equalised, in proportion as machinery obliterates all distinctions of labour, and nearly everywhere reduces wages to the same low level. The growing competition among the bourgeois, and the resulting commercial crises, make the wages of the workers ever more fluctuating. The unceasing improvement of machinery, ever more rapidly developing, makes their livelihood more and more precarious; the collisions between individual workmen and individual bourgeois take more and more the character of collisions between two classes. Thereupon the workers begin to form combinations (trades' unions)* against the bourgeois; they club together in order to keep up the rate of wages; they found permanent associations in order to make provision beforehand for these occasional revolts. Here and there the contest breaks out into riots.

* In the German original, this sentence reads: "They direct their attacks not only against the bourgeois conditions of production, but..."

Now and then the workers are victorious, but only for a time. The real fruit of their battles lies, not in the immediate result, but in the ever-expanding union of the workers. This union is helped on by the improved means of communication that are created by modern industry, and that place the workers of different localities in contact with one another. It was just this contact that was needed to centralise the numerous local struggles, all of the same character, into one national struggle between classes. But every class struggle is a political struggle. And that union, to attain which the burghers of the Middle Ages, with their miserable highways, required centuries, the modern proletarians, thanks to railways, achieve in a few years.

* The words "(trades' unions)" are not in the German original.

This organisation of the proletarians into a class, and consequently into a political party, is continually being upset again by the competition between the workers themselves. But it ever rises up again, stronger, firmer, mightier. It compels legislative recognition of particular interests of the workers, by taking advantage of the divisions among the bourgeoisie itself. Thus the ten-hours' bill in England was carried.

Altogether, collisions between the classes of the old society further, in many ways, the course of development of the proletariat. The bourgeoisie finds itself involved in a constant battle. At first with the aristocracy; later on, with those portions of the bourgeoisie itself, whose interests have become antagonistic to the progress of industry; at all times with the bourgeoisie of foreign countries. In all these battles it sees itself compelled to appeal to the proletariat, to ask for its help, and thus, to drag it into the political arena. The bourgeoisie itself, therefore, supplies the proletariat with its own elements of political and general education,* in other words, it furnishes the proletariat with weapons for fighting the bourgeoisie.

Further, as we have already seen, entire sections of the ruling classes are, by the advance of industry, precipitated into the proletariat, or are at least threatened in their conditions of existence. These also supply the proletariat with fresh elements of enlightenment and progress.

Finally, in times when the class struggle nears the decisive hour, the process of dissolution going on within the ruling class, in fact within the whole range of old society, assumes such a violent, glaring character, that a small section of the ruling class cuts itself adrift, and joins the revolutionary class, the class that holds the future in its hands. Just as, therefore, at an earlier period, a section of the nobility went over to the bourgeoisie, so now a portion of the bourgeoisie goes over to the proletariat, and in particular, a portion of the bourgeois ideologists, who have raised themselves to the level of comprehending theoretically the historical movement as a whole.

* In the German original, the words "elements of political and general education" read "elements of education."

 In the German original, the words "fresh elements of enlightenment and progress" read "a mass of educational elements."

Of all the classes that stand face to face with the bourgeoisie today, the proletariat alone is a really revolutionary class. The other classes decay and finally disappear in the face of modern industry; the proletariat is its special and essential product.

The lower middle class, the small manufacturer, the shopkeeper, the artisan, the peasant, all these fight against the bourgeoisie, to save from extinction their existence as fractions of the middle class. They are therefore not revolutionary, but conservative. Nay more, they are reactionary, for they try to roll back the wheel of history. If by chance they are revolutionary, they are so only in view of their impending transfer into the proletariat; they thus defend not their present, but their future interests; they desert their own standpoint to place themselves at that of the proletariat.

The "dangerous class," the social scum,* that passively rotting mass thrown off by the lowest layers of old society, may, here and there, be swept into the movement by a proletarian revolution; its conditions of life, however, prepare it far more for the part of a bribed tool of reactionary intrigue.

In the conditions of the proletariat, those of old society at large are already virtually swamped. The proletarian is without property; his relation to his wife and children has no longer anything in common with the bourgeois family relations; modern industrial labour, modern subjection to capital, the same in England as in France, in America as in Germany, has stripped him of every trace of national character. Law, morality, religion, are to him so many bourgeois prejudices, behind which lurk in ambush just as many bourgeois interests.

* In the German original, "The 'dangerous class,' the social scum" reads "The lumpen proletariat."

All the preceding classes that got the upper hand, sought to fortify their already acquired status by subjecting society at large to their conditions of appropriation. The proletarians cannot become masters of the productive forces of society, except by abolishing their own previous mode of appropriation, and thereby also every other previous mode of appropriation. They have nothing of their own to secure and to fortify; their mission is to destroy all previous securities for, and insurances of, individual property.

All previous historical movements were movements of minorities, or in the interest of minorities. The proletarian movement is the self-conscious,* independent movement of the immense majority, in the interest of the immense majority. The proletariat, the lowest stratum of our present society, cannot stir, cannot raise itself up, without the whole superincumbent strata of official society being sprung into the air.

Though not in substance, yet in form, the struggle of the proletariat with the bourgeoisie is at first a national struggle. The proletariat of each country must, of course, first of all settle matters with its own bourgeoisie.

In depicting the most general phases of the development of the proletariat, we traced the more or less veiled civil war, raging within existing society, up to the point where that war breaks out into open revolution, and where the violent overthrow of the bourgeoisie lays the foundation for the sway of the proletariat.

* The word "self-conscious," is not in the German original.

Hitherto, every form of society has been based, as we have already seen, on the antagonism of oppressing and oppressed classes. But in order to oppress a class, certain conditions must be assured to it under which it can, at least, continue its slavish existence. The serf, in the period of serfdom, raised himself to membership in the commune, just as the petty bourgeois, under the yoke of feudal absolutism, managed to develop into a bourgeois. The modern labourer, on the contrary, instead of rising with the progress of industry, sinks deeper and deeper below the conditions of existence of his own class. He becomes a pauper, and pauperism develops more rapidly than population and wealth. And here it becomes evident, that the bourgeoisie is unfit any longer to be the ruling class in society, and to impose its conditions of existence upon society as an over-riding law. It is unfit to rule because it is incompetent to assure an existence to its slave within his slavery, because it cannot help letting him sink into such a state, that it has to feed him, instead of being fed by him. Society can no longer live under this bourgeoisie, in other words, its existence is no longer compatible with society.

The essential condition for the existence, and for the sway of the bourgeois class, is the formation and augmentation of capital;* the condition for capital is wage-labour. Wage-labour rests exclusively on competition between the labourers. The advance of industry, whose involuntary promoter is the bourgeoisie, replaces the isolation of the labourers, due to competition, by their revolutionary combination, due to association. The development of modern industry, therefore, cuts from under its feet the very foundation on which the bourgeoisie produces and appropriates products. What the bourgeoisie therefore produces, above all, are its own grave-diggers. Its fall and the victory of the proletariat are equally inevitable.

* In the German original this sentence reads: "The essential condition for the existence, and for the sway of the bourgeois class, is the accumulation of wealth in the hands of private individuals, the formation and augmentation. . . ?"

II

PROLETARIANS AND COMMUNISTS

In what relation do the Communists stand to the proletarians as a whole?

The Communists do not form a separate party opposed to other working-class parties.

They have no interests separate and apart from those of the proletariat as a whole.

They do not set up any sectarian* principles of their own, by which to shape and mould the proletarian movement.

The Communists are distinguished from the other working-class parties by this only: 1. In the national struggles of the proletarians of the different countries, they point out and bring to the front the common interests of the entire proletariat, independently of all nationality. 2. In the various stages of development which the struggle of the working class against the bourgeoisie has to pass through, they always and everywhere represent the interests of the movement as a whole.

The Communists, therefore, are on the one hand, practically, the most advanced and resolute section of the working-class parties of every country, that section which pushes forward all others; on the other hand, theoretically, they have over the great mass of the proletariat the advantage of clearly understanding the line of march, the conditions, and the ultimate general results of the proletarian movement.

* In the German original, the word "sectarian" reads "special."

The immediate aim of the Communists is the same as that of all the other proletarian parties: formation of the proletariat into a class, overthrow of the bourgeois supremacy, conquest of political power by the proletariat.

The theoretical conclusions of the Communists are in no way based on ideas or principles that have been invented, or discovered, by this or that would-be universal reformer.

They merely express, in general terms, actual relations springing from an existing class struggle, from a historical movement going on under our very eyes. The abolition of existing property relations is not at all a distinctive feature of Communism.

All property relations in the past have continually been subject to historical change consequent upon the change in historical conditions.

The French Revolution, for example, abolished feudal property in favour of bourgeois property.

The distinguishing feature of Communism is not the abolition of property generally, but the abolition of bourgeois property. But modern bourgeois private property is the final and most complete expression of the system of producing and appropriating products that is based on class antagonisms, on the exploitation of the many by the few.*

* In the German original, the words "the exploitation of the many by the few" read "the exploitation of some by others."

In this sense, the theory of the Communists may be summed up in the single sentence: Abolition of private property.

We Communists have been reproached with the desire of abolishing the right of personally acquiring property as the fruit of a man's own labour, which property is alleged to be the groundwork of all personal freedom, activity and independence.

Hard-won, self-acquired, self-earned property! Do you mean the property of the petty artisan and of the small peasant, a form of property that preceded the bourgeois form? There is no need to abolish that; the development of industry has to a great extent already destroyed it, and is still destroying it daily.

Or do you mean modern bourgeois private property?

But does wage-labour create any property for the labourer? Not a bit. It creates capital, i.e., that kind of property which exploits wage-labour, and which cannot increase except upon condition of begetting a new supply of wage-labour for fresh exploitation. Property, in its present form, is based on the antagonism of capital and wage-labour. Let us examine both sides of this antagonism.

To be a capitalist, is to have not only a purely personal, but a social, status in production. Capital is a collective product, and only by the united action of many members, nay, in the last resort, only by the united action of all members of society, can it be set in motion.

Capital is therefore not a personal, it is a social power.

When, therefore, capital is converted into common property, into the property of all members of society, personal property is not thereby transformed into social property. It is only the social character of the property that is changed. It loses its class character.

Let us now take wage-labour.

The average price of wage-labour is the minimum wage, i.e.; that quantum of the means of subsistence which is absolutely requisite to keep the labourer in bare existence as a labourer. What, therefore, the wage-labourer appropriates by means of his labour, merely suffices to prolong and reproduce a bare existence. We by no means intend to abolish this personal appropriation of the products of labour, an appropriation that is made for the maintenance and reproduction of human life, and that leaves no surplus wherewith to command the labour of others. All that we want to do away with is the miserable character of this appropriation, under which the labourer lives merely to increase capital, and is allowed to live only in so far as the interest of the ruling class requires it.

In bourgeois society, living labour is but a means to increase accumulated labour. In Communist society, accumulated labour is but a means to widen, to enrich, to promote the existence of the labourer.

In bourgeois society, therefore, the past dominates the present; in Communist society, the present dominates the past. In bourgeois society capital is independent and has individuality, while the living person is dependent and has no individuality.

And the abolition of this state of things is called by the bourgeois, abolition of individuality and freedom! And rightly so. The abolition of bourgeois individuality, bourgeois independence, and bourgeois freedom is undoubtedly aimed at.

By freedom is meant, under the present bourgeois conditions of production, free trade, free selling and buying.

But if selling and buying disappears, free selling and buying disappears also. This talk about free selling and buying, and all the other "brave words" of our bourgeoisie about freedom in general, have a meaning, if any, only in contrast with restricted selling and buying, with the fettered traders of the Middle Ages, but have no meaning when opposed to the Communistic abolition of buying and selling, of the bourgeois conditions of production, and of the bourgeoisie itself.

You are horrified at our intending to do away with private property. But in your existing society, private property is already done away with for nine-tenths of the population; its existence for the few is solely due to its non-existence in the hands of those nine-tenths. You reproach us, therefore, with intending to do away with a form of property, the necessary condition for whose existence is the non-existence of any property for the immense majority of society.

In one word, you reproach us with intending to do away with your property. Precisely so; that is just what we intend.

From the moment when labour can no longer be converted into capital, money, or rent, into a social power capable of being monopolised, i.e., from the moment when individual property can no longer be transformed into bourgeois property, into capital,* from that moment, you say, individuality vanishes.

You must, therefore, confess that by "individual" you mean no other person than the bourgeois, than the middle-class owner of property. This person must, indeed, be swept out of the way, and made impossible.

Communism deprives no man of the power to appropriate the products of society; all that it does is to deprive him of the power to subjugate the labour of others by means of such appropriation.

* The words "into capital," are not in the German original.

It has been objected that upon the abolition of private property all work will cease, and universal laziness will overtake us.

According to this, bourgeois society ought long ago to have gone to the dogs through sheer idleness; for those of its members who work, acquire nothing, and those who acquire anything, do not work. The whole of this objection is but another expression of the tautology: that there can no longer be any wage-labour when there is no longer any capital.

All objections urged against the Communistic mode of producing and appropriating material products, have, in the same way, been urged against the Communistic modes of producing and appropriating intellectual products. Just as to the bourgeois, the disappearance of class property is the disappearance of production itself, so the disappearance of class culture is to him identical with the disappearance of all culture.

That culture, the loss of which he laments, is, for the enormous majority, a mere training to act as a machine.

But don't wrangle with us so long as you apply, to our intended abolition of bourgeois property, the standard of your bourgeois notions of freedom, culture, law, etc. Your very ideas are but the outgrowth of the conditions of your bourgeois production and bourgeois property, just as your jurisprudence is but the will of your class made into a law for all, a will, whose essential character and direction are determined by the economical conditions of existence of your class.

The selfish misconception that induces you to transform into eternal laws of nature and of reason, the social forms springing from your present mode of production and form of property — historical relations that rise and disappear in the progress of production — this misconception you share with every ruling class that has preceded you. What you see clearly in the case of ancient property, what you admit in the case of feudal property, you are of course forbidden to admit in the case of your own bourgeois form of property.

Abolition of the family! Even the most radical flare up at this infamous proposal of the Communists.

On what foundation is the present family, the bourgeois family, based? On capital, on private gain. In its completely developed form this family exists only among the bourgeoisie. But this state of things finds its complement in the practical absence of the family among the proletarians, and in public prostitution.

The bourgeois family will vanish as a matter of course when its complement vanishes, and both will vanish with the vanishing of capital.

Do you charge us with wanting to stop the exploitation of children by their parents? To this crime we plead guilty.

But, you will say, we destroy the most hallowed of relations, when we replace home education by social.

And your education! Is not that also social, and determined by the social conditions under which you educate, by the intervention, direct or indirect, of society, by means of schools, etc.? The Communists have not invented the intervention of society in education; they do but seek to alter the character of that intervention, and to rescue education from the influence of the ruling class.

The bourgeois claptrap about the family and education, about the hallowed co-relation of parent and child, becomes all the more disgusting, the more, by the action of modern industry, all family ties among the proletarians are torn asunder, and their children transformed into simple articles of commerce and instruments of labour.

But you Communists would introduce community of women; screams the whole bourgeoisie in chorus.

The bourgeois sees in his wife a mere instrument of production. He hears that the instruments of production are to be exploited in common, and, naturally, can come to no other conclusion than that the lot of being common to all will likewise fall to the women.

He has not even a suspicion that the real point aimed at is to do away with the status of women as mere instruments of production.

For the rest, nothing is more ridiculous than the virtuous indignation of our bourgeois at the community of women which, they pretend, is to be openly and officially established by the Communists. The Communists have no need to introduce community of women; it has existed almost from time immemorial.

Our bourgeois, not content with having the wives and daughters of their proletarians at their disposal, not to speak of common prostitutes, take the greatest pleasure in seducing each other's wives.

Bourgeois marriage is in reality a system of wives in common and thus, at the most, what the Communists might possibly be reproached with, is that they desire to introduce, in substitution for a hypocritically concealed, an openly legalised community of women. For the rest, it is self-evident that the abolition of the present system of production must bring with it the abolition of the community of women springing from that system, i.e., of prostitution both public and private.

The Communists are further reproached with desiring to abolish countries and nationality.

The working men have no country. We cannot take from them what they have not got. Since the proletariat must first of all acquire political supremacy, must rise to be the leading class of the nation,* must constitute itself the nation, it is, so far, itself national, though not in the bourgeois sense of the word.

National differences and antagonisms between peoples are daily more and more vanishing, owing to the development of the bourgeoisie, to freedom of commerce, to the world market, to uniformity in the mode of production and in the conditions of life corresponding thereto.

The supremacy of the proletariat will cause them to vanish still faster. United action, of the leading civilised countries at least, is one of the first conditions for the emancipation of the proletariat.

In proportion as the exploitation of one individual by another is put an end to, the exploitation of one nation by another will also be put an end to. In proportion as the antagonism between classes within the nation vanishes, the hostility of one nation to another will come to an end.

The charges against Communism made from a religious, a philosophical and, generally, from an ideological standpoint, are not deserving of serious examination.

Does it require deep intuition to comprehend that man's ideas, views and conceptions, in one word, man's consciousness, changes with every change in the conditions of his material existence, in his social relations and in his social life?

What else does the history of ideas prove, than that intellectual production changes its character in proportion as material production is changed? The ruling ideas of each age have ever been the ideas of its ruling class.

* In the German original, the words "the leading class of the nation" read "the national class."

When people speak of ideas that revolutionise society, they do but express the fact, that within the old society, the elements of a new one have been created, and that the dissolution of the old ideas keeps even pace with the dissolution of the old conditions of existence.

When the ancient world was in its last throes, the ancient religions were overcome by Christianity. When Christian ideas succumbed in the eighteenth century to rationalist ideas, feudal society fought its death-battle with the then revolutionary bourgeoisie. The ideas of religious liberty and freedom of conscience, merely gave expression to the sway of free competition within the domain of knowledge.*

"Undoubtedly," it will be said, "religious, moral, philosophical and juridical ideas have been modified in the course of historical development. But religion, morality, philosophy, political science, and law, constantly survived this change."

"There are, besides, eternal truths, such as Freedom, Justice, etc., that are common to all states of society. But Communism abolishes eternal truths, it abolishes all religion, and all morality, instead of constituting them on a new basis; it therefore acts in contradiction to all past historical experience."

What does this accusation reduce itself to? The history of all past society has consisted in the development of class antagonisms, antagonisms that assumed different forms at different epochs.

But whatever form they may have taken, one fact is common to all past ages, viz., the exploitation of one part of society by the other. No wonder, then, that the social consciousness of past ages, despite all the multiplicity and variety it displays, moves within certain common forms, or general ideas, which cannot completely vanish except with the total disappearance of class antagonisms.

* In the German edition of 1848, the word "knowledge" reads "conscience." In the German editions of 1872, 1883 and 1890, the word "knowledge" is used as in the English translation.

The Communist revolution is the most radical rupture with traditional property relations; no wonder that its development involves the most radical rupture with traditional ideas.

But let us have done with the bourgeois objections to Communism.

We have seen above, that the first step in the revolution by the working class, is to raise the proletariat to the position of ruling class, to win the battle of democracy.

The proletariat will use its political supremacy to wrest, by degrees, all capital from the bourgeoisie, to centralise all instruments of production in the hands of the State, i.e., of the proletariat organised as the ruling class; and to increase the total of productive forces as rapidly as possible.

Of course, in the beginning, this cannot be effected except by means of despotic inroads on the rights of property, and on the conditions of bourgeois production; by means of measures, therefore, which appear economically insufficient and untenable, but which, in the course of the movement, outstrip themselves, necessitate further inroads upon the old social order,* and are unavoidable as a means of entirely revolutionising the mode of production.

These measures will of course be different in different countries.

Nevertheless in the most advanced countries, the following will be pretty generally applicable.

1. Abolition of property in land and application of all rents of land to public purposes.

* The words "necessitate further inroads upon the old social order," are not in the German original,

2. A heavy progressive or graduated income tax.
3. Abolition of all right of inheritance.
4. Confiscation of the property of all emigrants and rebels.
5. Centralisation of credit in the hands of the State, by means of a national bank with State capital and an exclusive monopoly.

6. Centralisation of the means of communication and transport in the hands of the State.

7. Extension of factories and instruments of production owned by the State; the bringing into cultivation of waste lands, and the improvement of the soil generally in accordance with a common plan.

8. Equal liability of all to labour. Establishment of industrial armies, especially for agriculture.

9. Combination of agriculture with manufacturing industries; gradual abolition of the distinction* between town and country, by a more equable distribution of the population over the country.

10. Free education for all children in public schools. Abolition of children's factory labour in its present form. Combination of education with industrial production, etc.

When, in the course of development, class distinctions have disappeared, and all production has been concentrated in the hands of a vast association of the whole nation, the public power will lose its political character. Political power, properly so called, is merely the organised power of one class for oppressing another. If the proletariat during its contest with the bourgeoisie is compelled, by the force of circumstances, to organise itself as a class, if, by means of a revolution, it makes itself the ruling class, and, as such, sweeps away by force the old conditions of production, then it will, along with these conditions, have swept away the conditions for the existence of class antagonisms and of classes generally,* and will thereby have abolished its own supremacy as a class.

* In the German edition of 1848, the word "distinction" reads "antithesis." In the German editions of 1872, 1883 and 1890, the word "distinction" is used as in the English translation.

 The words "by a more equable distribution of the population over the country" are not in the German original.

 In the German original, the words "industrial production" read "material production."

In place of the old bourgeois society, with its classes and class antagonisms, we shall have an association, in which the free development of each is the condition for the free development of all.

III

SOCIALIST AND COMMUNIST LITERATURE

I. REACTIONARY SOCIALISM

a. Feudal Socialism

Owing to their historical position, it became the vocation of the aristocracies of France and England to write pamphlets against modern bourgeois society. In the French Revolution of July 1830, and in the English reform agitation, these aris-

* In the German editions of 1872, 1883 and 1890, the words "swept away the conditions for the existence of class antagonisms and of classes generally" read "swept away the conditions for the existence of class antagonisms, and classes generally." In the German edition of 1848, the wording is the same as in the English translation.

tocracies again succumbed to the hateful upstart. Thenceforth, a serious political contest was altogether out of the question. A literary battle alone remained possible. But even in the domain of literature the old cries of the restoration period* had become impossible.

In order to arouse sympathy, the aristocracy were obliged to lose sight, apparently, of their own interests, and to formulate their indictment against the bourgeoisie in the interest of the exploited working class alone. Thus the aristocracy took their revenge by singing lampoons on their new master, and whispering in his ears sinister prophecies of coming catastrophe.

In this way arose feudal Socialism: half lamentation, half lampoon; half echo of the past, half menace of the future; at times, by its bitter, witty and incisive criticism, striking the bourgeoisie to the very heart's core, but always ludicrous in its effect, through total incapacity to comprehend the march of modern history.

The aristocracy, in order to rally the people to them, waved the proletarian alms-bag in front for a banner. But the people, so often as it joined them, saw on their hindquarters the old feudal coats of arms, and deserted with loud and irreverent laughter.

One section of the French Legitimists and "Young England,"³⁰ exhibited this spectacle.

In pointing out that their mode of exploitation was different to that of the bourgeoisie, the feudalists forget that they exploited under circumstances and conditions that were quite different, and that are now antiquated. In showing that, under their rule, the modern proletariat never existed, they forget

* Not the English Restoration, 1660 to 1689, but the French Restoration, 1814 to 1830. [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

Cover of the 1848 (30-page) edition of the
Manifesto of the Communist Party

that the modern bourgeoisie is the necessary offspring of their own form of society.

For the rest, so little do they conceal the reactionary character of their criticism that their chief accusation against the bourgeoisie amounts to this, that under the bourgeois régime a class is being developed, which is destined to cut up root and branch the old order of society.

What they upbraid the bourgeoisie with is not so much that it creates a proletariat, as that it creates a revolutionary proletariat.

In political practice, therefore, they join in all coercive measures against the working class; and in ordinary life, despite their high-falutin phrases, they stoop to pick up the golden apples dropped from the tree of industry,* and to barter truth, love, and honour for traffic in wool, beetroot-sugar, and potato spirits.

As the parson has ever gone hand in hand with the landlord, so has Clerical Socialism with Feudal Socialism.

Nothing is easier than to give Christian asceticism a Socialist tinge. Has not Christianity declaimed against private property, against marriage, against the State? Has it not preached in the place of these, charity and poverty, celibacy and mortification of the flesh, monastic life and Mother

* The words "dropped from the tree of industry" are not in the German original.

 This applies chiefly to Germany where the landed aristocracy and squirearchy have large portions of their estates cultivated for their own account by stewards, and are, moreover, extensive beetroot-sugar manufacturers and distillers of potato spirits. The wealthier British aristocracy are, as yet, rather above that; but they, too, know how to make up for declining rents by lending their names to floaters of more or less shady joint-stock companies, [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

Church? Christian* Socialism is but the holy water with which the priest consecrates the heart-burnings of the aristocrat.

b. Petty-Bourgeois Socialism

The feudal aristocracy was not the only class that was ruined by the bourgeoisie, not the only class whose conditions of existence pined and perished in the atmosphere of modern bourgeois society. The mediaeval burgesses and the small peasant proprietors were the precursors of the modern bourgeoisie. In those countries which are but little developed, industrially and commercially, these two classes still vegetate side by side with the rising bourgeoisie.

In countries where modern civilisation has become fully developed, a new class of petty bourgeois has been formed, fluctuating between proletariat and bourgeoisie, and ever renewing itself as a supplementary part of bourgeois society. The individual members of this class, however, are being constantly hurled down into the proletariat by the action of competition, and, as modern industry develops, they even see the moment approaching when they will completely disappear as an independent section of modern society, to be replaced, in manufactures, agriculture and commerce, by overlookers, bailiffs and shopmen.

In countries like France, where the peasants constitute far more than half of the population, it was natural that writers who sided with the proletariat against the bourgeoisie, should use, in their criticism of the bourgeois régime, the standard of the peasant and petty bourgeois, and from the standpoint of these intermediate classes should take up the cudgels for the working class. Thus arose petty-bourgeois Socialism. Sismondi was the head of this school, not only in France but also in England.

* In the German edition of 1848, the word "Christian" reads "Holy and present-day." In the German editions of 1872, 1883 and 1890, the word "Christian" is used as in the English translation.

This school of Socialism dissected with great acuteness the contradictions in the conditions of modern production. It laid bare the hypocritical apologies of economists. It proved, incontrovertibly, the disastrous effects of machinery and division of labour; the concentration of capital and land in a few hands; overproduction and crises; it pointed out the inevitable ruin of the petty bourgeois and peasant, the misery of the proletariat, the anarchy in production, the crying inequalities in the distribution of wealth, the industrial war of extermination between nations, the dissolution of old moral bonds, of the old family relations, of the old nationalities.

In its positive aims, however, this form of Socialism aspires either to restoring the old means of production and of exchange, and with them the old property relations, and the old society, or to cramping the modern means of production and of exchange within the framework of the old property relations that have been, and were bound to be, exploded by those means. In either case, it is both reactionary and Utopian.

Its last words are: Corporate guilds for manufacture; patriarchal relations in agriculture.

Ultimately, when stubborn historical facts had dispersed all intoxicating effects of self-deception, this form of Socialism ended in a miserable fit of the blues.*

* In the German original, this sentence reads: "In its subsequent development this tendency sank into a cowardly fit of dejection."

c. German or "True" Socialism

The Socialist and Communist literature of France, a literature that originated under the pressure of a bourgeoisie in power, and that was the expression of the struggle against this power, was introduced into Germany at a time when the bourgeoisie, in that country, had just begun its contest with feudal absolutism.

German philosophers, would-be philosophers, and beaux esprits, eagerly seized on this literature, only forgetting that when these writings immigrated from France into Germany, French social conditions had not immigrated along with them. In contact with German social conditions, this French literature lost all its immediate practical significance, and assumed a purely literary aspect.* Thus, to the German philosophers of the eighteenth century, the demands of the first French Revolution were nothing more than the demands of "Practical Reason" in general, and the utterance of the will of the revolutionary French bourgeoisie signified in their eyes the laws of pure Will, of Will as it was bound to be, of true human Will generally.

The work of the German literati consisted solely in bringing the new French ideas into harmony with their ancient philosophical conscience, or rather, in annexing the French ideas without deserting their own philosophic point of view.

This annexation took place in the same way in which a foreign language is appropriated, namely, by translation.

* In the German original there is another sentence after this which reads: "It was bound to appear as idle speculation about real society and about the realisation of the essence of man." In the German editions of 1872, 1883 and 1890, the sentence reads: "It was bound to appear as idle speculation about the realisation of the essence of man."

It is well known how the monks wrote silly lives of Catholic saints over the manuscripts on which the classical works of ancient heathendom had been written. The German literati reversed this process with the profane French literature. They wrote their philosophical nonsense beneath the French original. For instance, beneath the French criticism of the economic functions of money, they wrote "Alienation of Humanity," and beneath the French criticism of the bourgeois State, they wrote "Dethronement of the Category of the General," and so forth.

The introduction of these philosophical phrases at the back of the French historical criticisms they dubbed "Philosophy of Action," "True Socialism," "German Science of Socialism," "Philosophical Foundation of Socialism," and so on.

The French Socialist and Communist literature was thus completely emasculated. And, since it ceased in the hands of the German to express the struggle of one class with the other, he felt conscious of having overcome "French one-sidedness" and of representing, not true requirements, but the requirements of Truth; not the interests of the proletariat, but the interests of Human Nature, of Man in general, who belongs to no class, has no reality, who exists only in the misty realm of philosophical fantasy.

This German Socialism, which took its school-boy task so seriously and solemnly, and extolled its poor stock-in-trade in such mountebank fashion, meanwhile gradually lost its pedantic innocence.

The fight of the German, and especially of the Prussian bourgeoisie against feudal aristocracy and absolute monarchy, in other words, the liberal movement, became more earnest.

By this, the long-wished-for opportunity was offered to "True" Socialism of confronting the political movement with the Socialist demands, of hurling the traditional anathemas against liberalism, against representative government, against bourgeois competition, bourgeois freedom of the press, bourgeois legislation, bourgeois liberty and equality, and of preaching to the masses that they had nothing to gain, and everything to lose, by this bourgeois movement. German Socialism forgot, in the nick of time, that the French criticism, whose silly echo it was, presupposed the existence of modern bourgeois society, with its corresponding economic conditions of existence, and the political constitution adapted thereto, the very things whose attainment was the object of the pending struggle in Germany.

To the absolute governments, with their following of parsons, professors, country squires and officials, it served as a welcome scarecrow against the threatening bourgeoisie.

It was a sweet finish after the bitter pills of floggings and bullets with which these same governments, just at that time, dosed the German working-class risings.

While this "True" Socialism thus served the governments as a weapon for fighting the German bourgeoisie, it, at the same time, directly represented a reactionary interest, the interest of the German Philistines. In Germany the petty-bourgeois class, a relic of the sixteenth century, and since then constantly cropping up again under various forms, is the real social basis of the existing state of things.

To preserve this class is to preserve the existing state of things in Germany. The industrial and political supremacy of the bourgeoisie threatens it with certain destruction — on the one hand, from the concentration of capital; on the other, from the rise of a revolutionary proletariat. "True" Socialism appeared to kill these two birds with one stone. It spread like an epidemic.

The robe of speculative cobwebs, embroidered with flowers of rhetoric, steeped in the dew of sickly sentiment, this transcendental robe in which the German Socialists wrapped their sorry "eternal truths," all skin and bone, served to wonderfully increase the sale of their goods amongst such a public.

And on its part, German Socialism recognised, more and more, its own calling as the bombastic representative of the petty-bourgeois Philistine.

It proclaimed the German nation to be the model nation, and the German petty Philistine to be the typical man. To every villainous meanness of this model man it gave a hidden, higher, Socialistic interpretation, the exact contrary of its real character. It went to the extreme length of directly opposing the "brutally destructive" tendency of Communism, and of proclaiming its supreme and impartial contempt of all class struggles. With very few exceptions, all the so-called Socialist and Communist publications that now (1847) circulate in Germany belong to the domain of this foul and enervating literature.*

2. CONSERVATIVE OR BOURGEOIS SOCIALISM

A part of the bourgeoisie is desirous of redressing social grievances, in order to secure the continued existence of bourgeois society.

* The revolutionary storm of 1848 swept away this whole shabby tendency and cured its protagonists of the desire to dabble further in Socialism. The chief representative and classical type of this tendency is Herr Karl Grün. [Note by Engels to the German edition of 1890.]

To this section belong economists, philanthropists, humanitarians, improvers of the condition of the working class, organisers of charity, members of societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, temperance fanatics, hole-and-corner reformers of every imaginable kind. This form of Socialism has, moreover, been worked out into complete systems.

We may cite Proudhon's Philosophie de la Misère [Philosophy of Poverty] as an example of this form.

The Socialistic bourgeois want all the advantages of modern social conditions without the struggles and dangers necessarily resulting therefrom. They desire the existing state of society minus its revolutionary and disintegrating elements. They wish for a bourgeoisie without a proletariat. The bourgeoisie naturally conceives the world in which it is supreme to be the best; and bourgeois Socialism develops this comfortable conception into various more or less complete systems. In requiring the proletariat to carry out such a system, and thereby to march straightway into the social New Jerusalem, it but requires in reality, that the proletariat should remain within the bounds of existing society, but should cast away all its hateful ideas concerning the bourgeoisie.

A second and more practical, but less systematic, form of this Socialism sought to depreciate every revolutionary movement in the eyes of the working class, by showing that no mere political reform, but only a change in the material conditions of existence, in economical relations, could be of any advantage to them. By changes in the material conditions of existence, this form of Socialism, however, by no means understands abolition of the bourgeois relations of production, an abolition that can be effected only by a revolution, but administrative reforms, based on the continued existence of these relations; reforms, therefore, that in no respect affect the relations between capital and labour, but, at the best, lessen the cost, and simplify the administrative work, of bourgeois government.

Bourgeois Socialism attains adequate expression, when, and only when, it becomes a mere figure of speech.

Free trade: for the benefit of the working class. Protective duties: for the benefit of the working class. Prison Reform:* for the benefit of the working class. This is the last word and the only seriously meant word of bourgeois Socialism.

It is summed up in the phrase: the bourgeois is a bourgeois — for the benefit of the working class.

3. CRITICAL-UTOPIAN SOCIALISM AND COMMUNISM

We do not here refer to that literature which, in every great modern revolution, has always given voice to the demands of the proletariat, such as the writings of Babeuf and others.

The first direct attempts of the proletariat to attain its own ends, made in times of universal excitement, when feudal society was being overthrown, these attempts necessarily failed, owing to the then undeveloped state of the proletariat, as well as to the absence of the economic conditions for its emancipation, conditions that had yet to be produced, and could be produced by the impending bourgeois epoch alone. The revolutionary literature that accompanied these first movements of the proletariat had necessarily a reactionary character. It inculcated universal asceticism and social levelling in its crudest form.

* In the German original, the words "Prison Reform" read "Solitary confinement."

The Socialist and Communist systems properly so called, those of Saint-Simon, Fourier, Owen and others, spring into existence in the early undeveloped period, described above, of the struggle between proletariat and bourgeoisie (see Section I. Bourgeois and Proletarians).

The founders of these systems see, indeed, the class antagonisms, as well as the action of the decomposing elements in the prevailing form of society. But the proletariat, as yet in its infancy, offers to them the spectacle of a class without any historical initiative or any independent political movement.

Since the development of class antagonism keeps even pace with the development of industry, the economic situation, as they find it, does not as yet offer to them the material conditions for the emancipation of the proletariat. They therefore search after a new social science, after new social laws, that are to create these conditions.

Historical action is to yield to their personal inventive action, historically created conditions of emancipation to fantastic ones, and the gradual, spontaneous class organisation of the proletariat to an organisation of society specially contrived by these inventors. Future history resolves itself, in their eyes, into the propaganda and the practical carrying out of their social plans.

In the formation of their plans they are conscious of caring chiefly for the interests of the working class, as being the most suffering class. Only from the point of view of being the most suffering class does the proletariat exist for them.

The undeveloped state of the class struggle, as well as their own surroundings, causes Socialists of this kind to consider themselves far superior to all class antagonisms. They want to improve the condition of every member of society, even that of the most favoured. Hence, they habitually appeal to society at large, without distinction of class; nay, by preference, to the ruling class. For how can people, when once they understand their system, fail to see in it the best possible plan of the best possible state of society?

Hence, they reject all political, and especially all revolutionary, action; they wish to attain their ends by peaceful means, and endeavour, by small experiments, necessarily doomed to failure, and by the force of example, to pave the way for the new social Gospel.

Such fantastic pictures of future society, painted at a time when the proletariat is still in a very undeveloped state and has but a fantastic conception of its own position, correspond with* the first instinctive yearnings of that class for a general reconstruction of society.

But these Socialist and Communist publications contain also a critical element. They attack every principle of existing society. Hence they are full of the most valuable materials for the enlightenment of the working class. The practical measures proposed in them — such as the abolition of the distinction between town and country, of the family, of the carrying on of industries for the account of private individuals, and of the wage system, the proclamation of social harmony, the conversion of the functions of the State into a mere superintendence of production, all these proposals point solely to the disappearance of class antagonisms which were, at that time, only just cropping up, and which, in these publications, are recognised in their earliest, indistinct and undefined forms only. These proposals, therefore, are of a purely Utopian character.

* In the German editions of 1872, 1883 and 1890, the words "correspond with" read "arise from."

 In the German original, the words "The practical measures proposed in them" read "Their positive proposals for future society."

 In the German original, the word "distinction" reads "antithesis."

The significance of Critical-Utopian Socialism and Communism bears an inverse relation to historical development. In proportion as the modern class struggle develops and takes definite shape, this fantastic standing apart from the contest, these fantastic attacks on it, lose all practical value and all theoretical justification. Therefore, although the originators of these systems were, in many respects, revolutionary, their disciples have, in every case, formed mere reactionary sects. They hold fast by the original views of their masters, in opposition to the progressive historical development of the proletariat. They, therefore, endeavour, and that consistently, to deaden the class struggle and to reconcile the class antagonisms. They still dream of experimental realisation of their social Utopias, of founding isolated phalanstères, of establishing "Home Colonies," of setting up a "Little Icaria"* — duodecimo editions of the New Jerusalem — and to realise all these castles in the air, they are compelled to appeal to the feelings and purses of the bourgeois. By degrees they sink into the category of the reactionary conservative Socialists depicted above, differing from these only by more systematic pedantry, and by their fanatical and superstitious belief in the miraculous effects of their social science.

* Phalanstères were Socialist colonies on the plan of Charles Fourier; Icaria was the name given by Cabet to his Utopia and, later on, to his American Communist colony. [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

"Home Colonies" were what Owen called his Communist model societies. Phalanstères was the name of the public palaces planned by Fourier. Icaria was the name given to the Utopian land of fancy, whose Communist institutions Cabet portrayed. [Note by Engels to the German edition of 1890.]

They, therefore, violently oppose all political action on the part of the working class; such action, according to them, can only result from blind unbelief in the new Gospel.

The Owenites in England, and the Fourierists in France, respectively oppose the Chartists and the Réformistes.³¹

IV

POSITION OF THE COMMUNISTS IN RELATION TO THE VARIOUS EXISTING OPPOSITION PARTIES

Section II has made clear the relations of the Communists to the existing working-class parties, such as the Chartists in England and the Agrarian Reformers in America.

The Communists fight for the attainment of the immediate aims, for the enforcement of the momentary interests of the working class; but in the movement of the present, they also represent and take care of the future of that movement. In France the Communists ally themselves with the Social-Democrats,* against the conservative and radical bourgeoisie, reserving, however, the right to take up a critical position in regard to phrases and illusions traditionally handed down from the Great Revolution.

*The party then represented in Parliament by Ledru-Rollin, in literature by Louis Blanc, in the daily press by the Réforme. The name of Social-Democracy signified, with these its inventors, a section of the Democratic or Republican party more or less tinged with Socialism. [Note by Engels to the English edition of 1888.]

The party in France which at that time called itself Socialist-Democratic was represented in political life by Ledru-Rollin and in literature by Louis Blanc; thus it differed immeasurably from present-day German Social-Democracy. [Note by Engels to the German edition of 1890.]

In Switzerland they support the Radicals, without losing sight of the fact that this party consists of antagonistic elements, partly of Democratic Socialists, in the French sense, partly of radical bourgeois.

In Poland they support the party that insists on an agrarian revolution as the prime condition for national emancipation, that party which fomented the insurrection of Cracow in 1846.

In Germany they fight with the bourgeoisie whenever it acts in a revolutionary way, against the absolute monarchy, the feudal squirearchy, and the petty bourgeoisie.³²

But they never cease, for a single instant, to instil into the working class the clearest possible recognition of the hostile antagonism between bourgeoisie and proletariat, in order that the German workers may straightway use, as so many weapons against the bourgeoisie, the social and political conditions that the bourgeoisie must necessarily introduce along with its supremacy, and in order that, after the fall of the reactionary classes in Germany, the fight against the bourgeoisie itself may immediately begin.

The Communists turn their attention chiefly to Germany, because that country is on the eve of a bourgeois revolution that is bound to be carried out under more advanced conditions of European civilisation, and with a much more developed proletariat than that of England was in the seventeenth, and of France in the eighteenth century, and because the bourgeois revolution in Germany will be but the prelude to an immediately following proletarian revolution.

In short, the Communists everywhere support every revolutionary movement against the existing social and political order of things.

In all these movements they bring to the front, as the leading question in each, the property question, no matter what its degree of development at the time.

Finally, they labour everywhere for the union and agreement of the democratic parties of all countries.

The Communists disdain to conceal their views and aims. They openly declare that their ends can be attained only by the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions. Let the ruling classes tremble at a Communistic revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win.

Working Men of All Countries, Unite!

NOTES

¹ The Manifesto of the Communist Party is the greatest programmatic document of scientific communism. "This little booklet is worth whole volumes: to this day its spirit inspires and guides the entire organised and fighting proletariat of the civilised world." (V.I. Lenin.) As a platform drawn up by Marx and Engels for the Communist League from December 1847 to January 1848, the Manifesto first appeared, in German, in February 1848 in London as a pamphlet of 23 pages. From March to July 1848, it was reprinted serially in the Deutsche Londoner Zeitung, the democratic organ of the German emigrants. In the same year the German edition of the Manifesto was reprinted in London as a pamphlet of 30 pages. This edition served as the basis of the subsequent editions authorised by Marx and Engels. In 1848 the Manifesto was translated into several other European languages — French, Polish, Italian, Danish, Flemish and Swedish. The authors' names were not mentioned in the editions of 1848. They were first given in the editorial remarks written by George Harney for the first English translation of the Manifesto which was printed in the Chartist paper The Red Republican in 1850. title-page

² On the initiative of the editorial board of the Volksstaat, a new German edition of the Manifesto was published in 1872, with a preface by Marx and Engels and some minor changes in the text. It bore the title The Communist Manifesto, as did the later German editions of 1883 and 1890. p. 1

³ The February Revolution in France, 1848. p. 1

⁴ The Red Republican was a Chartist weekly published from June to November 1850 by George Harney. In its Nos. 21-24, November 1850, the first English translation of the Manifesto of the Communist Party appeared under the title, Manifesto of the German Communist Party. p. 1

⁵ Le Socialiste, organ of the French Section of the International, was a French weekly published in New York from October 1871 to May 1873. It supported the bourgeois and petty-bourgeois elements in the North American Federation of the International. After the Hague Congress (September 1872) it severed connections with the International. It published the Manifesto of the Communist Party in January and February 1872. p. 1

⁶ See Karl Marx, The Civil War in France, Foreign Languages Press, Peking, 1966, p. 64. pp. 2, 14

⁷ This refers to the second Russian edition of the Manifesto which appeared in 1882 in Geneva. In the postscript to the article "On Social Relations in Russia," Engels spoke of G. V. Plekhanov as the translator and Plekhanov acknowledged this himself in the Russian edition of 1900. For the 1882 edition Marx and Engels wrote a preface which appeared in Russian in Narodnaya Volya (The Will of the People) on February 5, 1882. It appeared in German on April 13, 1882, in No. 16 of the Sozialdemokrat, organ of the German Social-Democratic Party. Engels included it in the German edition of the Manifesto of 1890. p. 4

⁸ As a matter of fact, this edition appeared in 1869. In Engels' preface to the English edition of 1888, the publication date of this Russian translation was also incorrectly given (see p. 11). p. 4

⁹ Kolokol (The Bell), Russian revolutionary democratic journal, published by A. I. Herzen and N. P. Ogaryov in London from 1857 to 1865 and afterwards in Geneva. It was published in Russian from 1857 to 1867 and in French with a Russian supplement from 1868 to 1869. p. 4

¹⁰ This is a reference to the situation following the assassination of Czar Alexander II by members of the Narodnaya Volya on March 13, 1881, when Alexander III, fearful of fresh acts of terrorism by the secret executive committee of the Narodnaya Volya, hid himself in Gatchina, southwest of present-day Leningrad. p. 5

¹¹ This refers to the third German edition of the Manifesto, the first edition collated by Engels after Marx's death. p. 7

¹² The Cologne Communist Trial (October 4 to November 12, 1852) was a case fabricated by the Prussian government. It arrested 11 members of the Communist League (1847-52) — the first international communist organisation of the proletariat, led by Marx and Engels with the Manifesto of the Communist Party as its programme — and handed them over to the court for trial on the charge of "high treason." Evidence produced by Prussian police-spies consisted of a forged "original minute-book" of the sittings of the Communist League's Central Council and other falsified documents, as well as papers stolen by the police from the adventurist Willich-Schapper faction, which had already been expelled from the League. Based on the faked documents and false testimonies, the court sentenced seven of the defendants from three to six years of imprisonment. Marx and Engels thoroughly exposed the provocation of the organisers of this trial and the despicable tricks the Prussian police state employed against the international workers' movement. (See Marx, "Revelations About the Cologne Communist Trial," and Engels, "The Late Trial at Cologne.") pp. 10, 20

¹³ A quotation from a speech by W. Bevan, President of the Trades Union Congress, delivered at a meeting of the Congress held at Swansea in 1887. Bevan's speech was reported in the journal Commonweal on September 17, 1887. p. 11

¹⁴ Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly, an American journal published in New York from 1870 to 1876, by the bourgeois feminists, Victoria Woodhull and Tennessee Claflin. The weekly carried an abridged version of the Manifesto of the Communist Party in its issue of December 30, 1871. p. 11

¹⁵ The translator of the second Russian edition of the Manifesto was actually G. V. Plekhanov. See Note 7. p. 11

¹⁶ The Danish translation referred to here — K. Marx og F. Engels: Det Kommunistiske Manifest, København 1885 — contains some omissions and inaccuracies, which Engels pointed out in his preface to the German edition of 1890 of the Manifesto. p. 11

¹⁷ In fact, the French translation, made by Laura Lafargue, was published in Le Socialiste from August 29 to November 7, 1885. It was also printed as an appendix to G. T. Mermeix's La France socialiste, Paris, 1886.

Le Socialiste, a weekly founded in Paris by Jules Guesde in 1885. Before 1902 it was the organ of the French Labour Party. It became the organ of the Socialist Party of France from 1902 to 1905, and of the French Socialist Party from 1905. Engels contributed to the journal during the 1880s and 1890s. p. 11

¹⁸ The Spanish translation appeared in El Socialista from July to August 1886 and was also published as a pamphlet in the same year.

El Socialista, organ of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party, was a weekly first published in Madrid in 1885. p. 12

¹⁹ This axiom was set out by Marx and Engels in a number of their works dating from the 1840s. For the formulation referred to here, see the "General Rules of the International Working Men's Association."

pp. 13, 22

²⁰ In the preface to the German edition of 1872 this phrase is worded somewhat differently. See p. 2 of this book.

p. 14

²¹ Engels wrote this preface for the fourth German edition of the Manifesto which appeared in London, May 1890, as one of the Sozialdemokratische Bibliothek series. This was the last edition collated by one of its authors. It also included the prefaces to the German editions of 1872 and 1883. A part of Engels' preface to this new edition was reprinted in an editorial entitled "A New Edition of The Communist Manifesto" in No. 33, August 16, 1890, of the Sozialdemokrat, organ of the German Social-Democratic Party, as well as in an editorial of the Arbeiter-Zeitung, No. 48, November 28, 1890, celebrating Engels' seventieth birthday.

p. 16

²² Engels is referring to his preface to the German edition of 1883.

p. 16

²³ The lost German manuscript of the preface written by Marx and Engels for the Russian edition of the Manifesto was finally found. When retranslating this preface from Russian to German, Engels made some slight changes in it.

p. 16

²⁴ The Geneva Congress of the First International was held September 3-8, 1866. Attending the Congress were 60 delegates representing the General Council and the different sections of the International, as well as workers' societies from England, France, Germany and Switzerland. Hermann Jung was in the chair. Marx's "Instructions for the Delegates of the Provisional Central Council, the Different Questions" was read at the Congress as the General Council's official report. The Proudhonists who commanded one third of the votes at the Congress counterposed Marx's "Instructions" with a comprehensive programme covering all items on the agenda. However, supporters of the General Council won on most of the questions under discussion. The Congress adopted 6 of the 9 points in the "Instructions" as resolutions. These covered questions involving the united action of the international forces, the legislative introduction of the eight-hour working day, child and woman labour, co-operative labour, trade unions, and the standing armies. The Geneva Congress also approved the Rules and Administrative Regulations of the International Working Men's Association.

The Paris Workers' Congress — the International Socialist Workers' Congress — was held in Paris, July 14-20, 1889, and was actually the founding congress of the Second International. The French opportunists, the Possibilists, and their followers in the British Social Democratic Federation attempted to take the preparation for the Congress into their hands, seize its leadership and obstruct the building of a new international unity of the socialist and workers' organisations on the basis of Marxism. But the Marxists led directly by Engels waged a persistent struggle against them. And by the time the Congress opened on July 14, 1889 — the centenary of the storming of the Bastille — the Marxist parties had become dominant. Present at the Congress were 393 delegates from 20 European and American countries. Their attempt having failed, the Possibilists called a rival congress in Paris on the same day to counterpose the Marxist Congress. Only a few of the foreign delegates attended the Possibilists' congress, and most of them were fake representatives.

The International Socialist Workers' Congress listened to reports made by delegates of the socialist parties on the working-class movement in their respective countries, worked out the basic principles of international labour legislation, endorsed the demand for the legislative introduction of the eight-hour working day and pointed out the ways workers could attain their objectives. The Congress stressed the necessity of the political organisation of the proletariat and of struggling for the realisation of the workers' political demands. It advocated the abolition of the standing armies and proposed the universal arming of the people. The most notable decision made by the Congress was to call on the workers of all lands to celebrate May First each year as the international festival of the working class.

p. 22

²⁵ Engels wrote this preface in German for the new Polish edition of the Manifesto, which was published in 1892 in London by the Przedświt Press run by Polish socialists. After sending the preface to the Przedświt Press, Engels wrote, in a letter to Stanislaw Mendelson, dated February 11, 1892, that he would like to learn Polish and thoroughly study the development of the workers' movement in Poland, so that he could write a more detailed preface for the next Polish edition of the Manifesto.

p. 24

²⁶ Congress Poland, a part of Poland which under the official name of the Kingdom of Poland was ceded to Russia by the decisions of the Vienna Congress of 1814-15.

p. 24

²⁷ This preface, originally entitled "To the Italian Reader," was written by Engels in French for the Italian edition of the Manifesto at the request of the Italian Socialist leader Filippo Turati. The Italian edition was published as a pamphlet in Milan by the press of Critica Sociale, a Socialist theoretical periodical. The Manifesto was translated into Italian by Pompeo Bettini, and Engels' preface by Turati. p. 27

²⁸ In many of his works, particularly in his article "Die Erfurterei im Jahre 1839," Marx set out the idea that reaction after 1848 acted as a peculiar testamentary executor of the revolution, inevitably fulfilling the demands of the revolution, although in a tragi-comic manner, almost as a satire on the revolution. p. 27

²⁹ In their works written in later periods, Marx and Engels substituted the more accurate concepts of "value of labour power" and "price of labour power" (first introduced by Marx) for "value of labour" and "price of labour." p. 41

³⁰ The Legitimists supported the Bourbon Dynasty which was overthrown in 1830 and which represented the interest of the hereditary big landowners. In the struggle against the Orleans Dynasty, which was propped up by the financial aristocracy and big bourgeoisie, a section of the Legitimists often resorted to social demagoguery and pretended to be the protectors of the working people against exploitation by the bourgeoisie.

Young England, a group of politicians and men of letters who belonged to the Tory Party. It was organised in the early 1840s. Representatives of Young England reflected the discontent of the landed aristocracy against the increasing economic and political strength of the bourgeoisie. They resorted to demagogic methods in order to place the working class under their influence and use them to combat the bourgeoisie. p. 62

³¹ The Réformistes were adherents of the newspaper La Réforme, which was published in Paris from 1843 to 1850. They advocated the establishment of a republic and the carrying out of democratic and social reforms. p. 75

³² Kleinbürgerei in the German original. Marx and Engels used this term to describe the reactionary elements of the urban petty bourgeoisie. p. 76

CONTENTS

PREFACE TO THE GERMAN EDITION OF 1872	1
PREFACE TO THE RUSSIAN EDITION OF 1882	4
PREFACE TO THE GERMAN EDITION OF 1883	7
PREFACE TO THE ENGLISH EDITION OF 1888	9
PREFACE TO THE GERMAN EDITION OF 1890	16
PREFACE TO THE POLISH EDITION OF 1892	24
PREFACE TO THE ITALIAN EDITION OF 1893	27
MANIFESTO OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY	31
I. BOURGEOIS AND PROLETARIANS	32
II. PROLETARIANS AND COMMUNISTS	49
III. SOCIALIST AND COMMUNIST LITERATURE	61
1. Reactionary Socialism	61
a. Feudal Socialism	61
b. Petty-Bourgeois Socialism	64
c. German or "True" Socialism	66
2. Conservative or Bourgeois Socialism	69
3. Critical-Utopian Socialism and Communism	71
IV. POSITION OF THE COMMUNISTS IN RELATION TO THE VARIOUS EXISTING OPPOSITION PARTIES	75
NOTES	78

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	Facing page
Title-Page of the First Edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party	30
A Page from the Original Manuscript of the Manifesto of the Communist Party	54
Cover of the 1848 (30-Page) Edition of the Manifesto of the Communist Party	62

Verlag Olga Benario und Herbert Baum

Der Verlag Olga Benario und Herbert Baum wurde gegründet, um eine Lücke zu schließen, die in den letzten Jahren immer deutlicher wurde.

Es geht darum, einen Verlag zu schaffen, der parteiisch ist, sich bewußt auf die Seite der Verdammten dieser Erde stellt und deshalb sein Verlagsprogramm internationalistisch gestaltet, als einen ersten Schritt für die solidarische Auswertung und die Propagierung der Erfahrungen der internationalen revolutionären Kämpfe.

Es geht darum, durch die Gestaltung des Verlagsprogramms ganz bewußt und solidarisch an die wirklichen kommunistischen Traditionen anzuknüpfen, an die wirklich revolutionäre internationale kommunistische Bewegung zur Zeit von Marx und Engels, Lenin und Stalin, an die positiven Erfahrungen der antirevisionistischen Kämpfe gegen den Chruschtschow- und Breschnew-Revisionismus.

Es geht darum, gegen die bürgerliche Wissenschaft die Tradition des wissenschaftlichen Kommunismus zu propagieren. Deshalb ist der Nachdruck der grundlegenden Schriften des wissenschaftlichen Kommunismus in verschiedenen Sprachen ein Schwerpunkt des Verlages.

Mit der Gründung und der Arbeit des Verlags Olga Benario und Herbert Baum soll ein Beitrag geleistet werden, um im Kampf gegen den Imperialismus überhaupt und den deutschen Imperialismus insbesondere der Verwirklichung des Mottos von Rosa Luxemburg und Karl Liebknecht näher zu kommen: „Nichts vergessen, alles lernen!“

Olga Benario, geboren am 12.2.1908, kämpfte als Mitglied des Kommunistischen Jugendverbandes Deutschlands (KJVD), der Jugendorganisation der KPD, in der Weimarer Republik gegen den aufkommenden Nazismus und gegen die regierende reaktionäre Sozialdemokratie, gegen den deutschen Imperialismus. Im April 1928 war sie führend an einer erfolgreichen bewaffneten Aktion zur Befreiung eines bis zu seiner Verhaftung illegal lebenden KPD-Genossen aus dem Berliner Polizeipräsidium beteiligt.

Olga Benario flüchtete vor dem deutschen Polizeiapparat in die Sowjetunion, wo sie zu einer wichtigen Mitarbeiterin der Kommunistischen Internationale wurde. In deren Auftrag ging sie 1935 nach Brasilien, um den Aufbau der KP Brasiliens zu unterstützen.

1936 wurde Olga Benario in Brasilien verhaftet, an die Nazis ausgeliefert und ins KZ Ravensbrück verschleppt, wo sie den „gelben Stern“ tragen mußte. Trotz Folter und Kerkerhaft hat sie keinerlei Aussagen gemacht – weder bei der Polizei des reaktionären brasilianischen Regimes noch bei der Gestapo. Olga Benario kämpfte als „Blockälteste“ im KZ Ravensbrück für die Verbesserung der Überlebenschancen der Häftlinge und gegen die Demoralisierung. Im April 1942 wurde Olga Benario in der Gaskammer von Bernburg von den Nazis ermordet.

Der Name Olga Benario steht

- ★ für den militanten und bewaffneten Kampf der kommunistischen Kräfte, für den Kampf um die proletarische Revolution;
- ★ für den praktizierten proletarischen Internationalismus;
- ★ für den konsequenten antinazistischen Kampf, der auch unter den schlimmsten Bedingungen, selbst in einem Nazi-KZ möglich ist.

Herbert Baum, geboren am 10.2.1912, war Mitglied des KJVD und gründete 1936 mit anderen Antinazisten eine Widerstandsgruppe, die später als Herbert-Baum-Gruppe bekannt geworden ist. Die Herbert-Baum-Gruppe nahm mit jüdischen Widerstandsgruppen und Gruppen von Zwangsarbeiterinnen und -arbeitern aus anderen Ländern Kontakt auf und führte mit ihnen gemeinsam einen illegalen Kampf gegen die Nazis.

Die Herbert-Baum-Gruppe organisierte Maßnahmen, um jüdische Menschen vor der Deportation und Ermordung in Nazi-Vernichtungslagern zu retten.

Die militante Aktion der Herbert-Baum-Gruppe gegen die antikommunistische Nazi-Ausstellung „Das Sowjetparadies“ am 13. Mai 1942 in Berlin, bei der ein Teil der Ausstellung durch Brandsätze zerstört wurde, fand weltweit Beachtung.

Einige Wochen später wurde Herbert Baum und fast alle anderen Mitglieder der Widerstandsgruppe aufgrund Verrats verhaftet. Herbert Baum wurde am 11. Juni 1942 von den Nazis durch bestialische Folter ermordet, ohne etwas an die Gestapo preisgegeben zu haben.

Der Name Herbert Baum steht

- ★ für die Organisierung einer internationalistischen antinazistischen Front in Deutschland;
- ★ für den Kampf gegen den nazistischen Antisemitismus und gegen den industriellen Völkermord der Nazis an 6 Millionen Juden und Jüdinnen;
- ★ für den Kampf gegen den Antikommunismus und für die Solidarität mit der sozialistischen Sowjetunion zur Zeit Stalins.

Die Namen Olga Benario und Herbert Baum stehen für die Tradition des antifaschistischen und revolutionären Kampfes der wirklich kommunistischen Kräfte.

Grundschriften des wissenschaftlichen Kommunismus

Karl Marx/Friedrich Engels

Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei (1848)

92 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 4 €, ISBN 3-932636-00-7

Karl Marx

Kritik des Gothaer Programms (1875)

96 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 4 €, ISBN 3-932636-01-5

W. I. Lenin

Staat und Revolution (1917)

159 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-02-3

J. W. Stalin

Über die Grundlagen des Leninismus (1924)

137 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-03-1

W. I. Lenin

Was tun? (1902)

276 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 10 €, ISBN 3-932636-04-X

J. W. Stalin

Über dialektischen und historischen Materialismus (1938)

45 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 2 €, ISBN 3-932636-05-8

W. I. Lenin

Der Imperialismus als höchstes Stadium des Kapitalismus (1916)

Der Imperialismus und die Spaltung des Sozialismus (1916)

185 Seiten, Offenbach 1999, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-36-8

W. I. Lenin

Ein Schritt vorwärts, zwei Schritte zurück (1904)

242 Seiten, Offenbach 2006, 10 €, ISBN 978-3-86589-042-9

W. I. Lenin

Zwei Taktiken der Sozialdemokratie in der demokratischen Revolution (1905)

192 Seiten, Offenbach 2006, 8 €, ISBN 978-3-86589-043-6

W. I. Lenin

Materialismus und Empiriokritizismus (1908)

410 Seiten, Offenbach 2006, 15 €, ISBN 978-3-86589-050-4

Karl Marx/Friedrich Engels: Ausgewählte Werke in zwei Bänden

Band I: 1848 – 1874

650 Seiten, 25 €, Offenbach 2004, ISBN 3-86589-001-6

Band II: 1875 – 1894

504 Seiten, 25 €, Offenbach 2004, ISBN 3-86589-002-4

W. I. Lenin: Ausgewählte Werke in zwei Bänden

Band I: 1884 – 1917

916 Seiten, 30 €, Offenbach 2004, ISBN 3-932636-93-7

Band II: 1917 – 1923

1037 Seiten, 30 €, Offenbach 2004, ISBN 3-932636-94-5

Grundschriften des wissenschaftlichen Kommunismus
in anderen Sprachen

Karl Marx/Friedrich Engels

Manifest der Kommunistischen Partei (1848)

Türkisch:

Karl Marx/Friedrich Engels

Komünist Partisi Manifestosu

82 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 4 € , ISBN 3-932636-06-6

Englisch:

Karl Marx/Frederick Engels

Manifesto of the Communist Party

83 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 4 € , ISBN 3-932636-07-4

Französisch:

Karl Marx/Friedrich Engels

Manifeste du Parti Communiste

82 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 4 € , ISBN 3-932636-08-2

Spanisch:

Carlos Marx/Federico Engels

Manifesto del Partido Comunista

87 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 4 € , ISBN 3-932636-09-0

Farsi:

کارل مارکس فریدریش انگلس

مانیفست حزب کمونیست

97 Seiten, Offenbach 1999, 4 € , ISBN 3-932636-10-4

Russisch:

К. Маркс и Ф. Энгельс
Манифест Коммунистической Партии

80 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 4 €, ISBN 3-932636-91-0

Russisch / Deutsch:

150 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-95-3

Serbokroatisch:

Karl Marx/Friedrich Engels

Manifest Komunističke Partije

168 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 8 €, ISBN 3-86589-000-8

Schriften und Texte des wissenschaftlichen Kommunismus

Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin

Über den Partisanenkampf

188 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-11-2

Programm der Kommunistischen Partei Rußlands (Bolschewiki) – 1919

Programm der Kommunistischen Internationale – 1928

241 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 10 €, ISBN 3-932636-19-8

Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin, Kl, Zetkin

Die kommunistische Revolution und die Befreiung der Frauen

164 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-18-X

Autorenkollektiv: Lehrbuch der politischen Ökonomie (1954)

J. W. Stalin: Ökonomische Probleme des Sozialismus in der UdSSR (1952)

515 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 20 €, ISBN 3-932636-21-X

Autorenkollektiv

W. I. Lenin – Ein kurzer Abriss seines Lebens und Wirkens (1947)

415 Seiten, Offenbach 1999, 15 €, ISBN 3-932636-35-X

W. I. Lenin/J. W. Stalin

Hauptmerkmale der Partei neuen Typs

143 Seiten, Offenbach 2000, 5 €, ISBN 3-932636-22-8

W. I. Lenin/J. W. Stalin

Über die Arbeiteraristokratie

115 Seiten, Offenbach 2001, 5 €, ISBN 3-932636-23-6

Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin

Grundlegende Merkmale der kommunistischen Gesellschaft

96 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-67-8

Autorenkollektiv

J. W. Stalin – Ein kurzer Abriß seines Lebens und Wirkens

409 Seiten, Offenbach 2003, 15 €, ISBN 3-932636-65-1

Stalin Werke Band 1 bis 13

sowie die vorhandenen Schriften 1934–1952, inklusive der “Geschichte der KPdSU(B) – Kurzer Lehrgang”

CD-ROM, Offenbach 2003, 10 €, ISBN 3-932636-72-4

Stalin-Biographie inklusive Werke-CD: 22 €, ISBN 3-932636-73-2

M. Glasser/A. Primakowski/B. Jakowlew

Studieren – Propagieren – Organisieren (1948 / 1951)

Drei Texte zu den Arbeitsmethoden von Marx, Engels, Lenin und Stalin

170 Seiten, Offenbach 2001, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-20-1

Béla Fogarasi

Dialektische Logik – mit einer Darstellung erkenntnistheoretischer Grundbegriffe (1953)

430 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 15 €, ISBN 3-932636-12-0

Texte internationaler revolutionärer Erfahrungen

Unter der Redaktion von Gorki, Kirow, Molotow, Shdanow, Stalin, Woroschilow

Geschichte des Bürgerkrieges in Rußland (1937/1949)

Band 1: Die Vorbereitung der proletarischen Revolution

(Vom Beginn des Krieges 1914 bis Anfang Oktober 1917)

540 Seiten, Offenbach 1999, 20 €, ISBN 3-932636-15-5

Band 2: Die Durchführung der proletarischen Revolution

(Oktober 1917 bis November 1917)

750 Seiten, Offenbach 1999, 25 €, ISBN 3-932636-16-3

Autorenkollektiv

Mao Tse-tung – seine Verdienste, seine Fehler

Band 1: 1926 – 1949

400 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 18 €, ISBN 3-932636-14-7

Band 2: 1950 – 1976

240 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 13 €, ISBN 3-86589-036-9

Autorenkollektiv

Zur „Polemik“ – Die revisionistische Linie des XX. Parteitags der KPdSU (1956) und die grundlegenden Fehler der berechtigten Kritik der KP Chinas (1963)

630 Seiten, Offenbach 2003, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-70-8

Die Selbstkritik der KP Indonesiens im Kampf gegen

den „friedlichen Weg“ der modernen Revisionisten

Fünf wichtige Dokumente des Politbüros des ZK der KP Indonesiens (PKI) von 1966/67
148 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 8 €, ISBN 3-86589-037-7

Autorenkollektiv

Kritik des Buches von Enver Hoxha „Imperialismus und Revolution“

264 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 15 €, ISBN 3-86589-012-1

Texte internationaler revolutionärer Erfahrungen in anderen Sprachen

Autorenkollektiv

Der XX. Parteitag der KPdSU 1956 – ein revisionistisches und konterrevolutionäres Programm (Materialien und Diskussionsbeiträge) und „Programmatische Erklärung der Revolutionären Kommunisten der Sowetunion (Bolschewiki)“ von 1966 (Auszug) in russischer Sprache: 106 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 6 €, ISBN 3-932636-47-3 in türkischer Sprache: 120 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-75-9 in französischer Sprache: 176 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 8 €, ISBN 3-86589-005-9 in italienischer Sprache: 108 Seiten, Offenbach 2006, 8 €, ISBN 978-3-86589-004-7

Dokumente und Analysen

Zur Geschichte Afghanistans – Ein Land im Würgegriff des Imperialismus

Über die Kriegspolitik des deutschen Imperialismus in Afghanistan

289 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 15 €, ISBN 3-932636-48-1

Der UN-Teilungsplan für Palästina und die Gründung des Staates Israel (1947/48)

Anhang: PLO-Charta von 1968 mit kritischen Anmerkungen

120 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-52-X

Texte zu Deutschland und dem deutschen Imperialismus

Die Rote Fahne – Zentralorgan der Kommunistischen Partei Deutschlands
(Sektion der Kommunistischen Internationale)

Begründet von Karl Liebknecht und Rosa Luxemburg

Reprint 1929 – Februar 1933, Hardcover-Bände im Format DIN A3

Januar – März 1929, 1080 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 95 €, ISBN 3-86589-018-0

April – Juni 1929, 534 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 70 €, ISBN 3-86589-019-9

Juli – September 1929, 1054 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 95 €, ISBN 3-86589-020-2

Oktober – Dezember 1929, 1054 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 95 €, ISBN 3-86589-021-0

Januar – Februar 1933, 452 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 70 €, ISBN 3-86589-034-2

Autorenkollektiv

Die Verbrechen des deutschen Imperialismus im Ersten Weltkrieg

150 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 8 €, ISBN 3-932636-92-9

Autorenkollektiv

Rosa Luxemburg, Karl Liebknecht und das revolutionäre Programm der KPD (1918)

200 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 10 €, ISBN 3-932636-74-0

Georgi Dimitroff

Gegen den Nazifaschismus

371 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 20 €, ISBN 3-932636-25-2

Autorenkollektiv

1418 Tage – Der Krieg des deutschen Nazifaschismus gegen die
Diktatur des Proletariats in der Sowjetunion (22. Juni 1941 – 8. Mai 1945)

220 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 13 €, ISBN 3-86589-035-0

Autorenkollektiv: Marx und Engels über das reaktionäre Preußentum (1943)

Alfred Klahr: Gegen den deutschen Chauvinismus (1944)

130 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 5 €, ISBN 3-932636-13-9

Autorenkollektiv

Über den Widerstand in den KZs und Vernichtungslagern des Nazifaschismus

204 Seiten, Offenbach 1998, 13 €, ISBN 3-932636-34-1

Gudrun Fischer

„Unser Land spie uns aus“

Jüdische Frauen auf der Flucht vor dem Naziterror nach Brasilien

220 Seiten, Offenbach 1998, 13 €, ISBN 3-932636-33-3

Freies Deutschland – Illustrierte Zeitschrift der antifaschistischen Emigration erschienen in Mexiko von November 1941 bis Juni 1946

Band 1: Nov. 1941 – Okt. 1942, 440 Seiten, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-96-1

Band 2: Nov. 1942 – Nov. 1943, 460 Seiten, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-97-X

Band 3: Dez. 1943 – Nov. 1944, 480 Seiten, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-98-8

Band 4: Dez. 1944 – Juni 1946, 660 Seiten, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-99-6

Internationale Hefte der Widerstandsbewegung (1959 – 1963)

Analysen und Dokumente über den internationalen Widerstand gegen den Nazifaschismus

Band 1: Heft 1 – 4 (1959 – 60), 560 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-49-X

Band 2: Heft 5 – 10 (1961 – 63), 528 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-50-3

Bd. 1 & 2 in einem Band (Hardcover): 1084 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 80 €, ISBN 3-932636-51-1

Das Potsdamer Abkommen (1945)

Anhang: Die Dokumente von Teheran und Jalta

83 Seiten, Offenbach 2001, 5 €, ISBN 3-932636-24-4

Bericht des internationalen Lagerkomitees des KZ Buchenwald (1949)

237 Seiten, 2. Auflage, Offenbach 2004, 10 €, ISBN 3-932636-26-0

Autorenkollektiv

Die Gründung der SED und ihre Vorgeschichte (1945 – 1946)

702 Seiten, Offenbach 2000, 33 €, ISBN 3-932636-38-4

Autorenkollektiv

10 Jahre „Deutsche Einheit“: Nazi-Terror von Hoyerswerda bis Düsseldorf

Nazis, Staat und Medien – ein Braunbuch

222 Seiten, Offenbach 2000, 13 €, ISBN 3-932636-37-6

Romane zur Geschichte der Revolutionen und Befreiungskämpfe

A. Schapowalow

Auf dem Weg zum Marxismus

Erinnerungen eines Arbeiterrevolutionärs

337 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 15 €, ISBN 3-932636-29-5

S. Mstislawski

Die Krähe ist ein Frühlingsvogel

404 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 15 €, ISBN 3-932636-17-1

I. Popow

Als die Nacht verging

593 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 20 €, ISBN 3-932636-30-9

Materialien

(Spiralbindung, DIN A4)

Leninismus – Lesehefte für Schulungen und Selbstunterricht

500 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-90-2

Die Kommunistische Internationale in Resolutionen und Beschlüssen

Band 1: 1919 – 1924

416 Seiten, Offenbach 1998, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-27-9

Hardcover: Offenbach 1998, 55 €, ISBN 3-932636-60-0

Band 2: 1925 – 1943

452 Seiten, Offenbach 1998, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-28-7

Hardcover: Offenbach 1998, 60 €, ISBN 3-932636-61-9

Die Kommunistische Partei der Sowjetunion in Resolutionen und Beschlüssen der Parteitage, Konferenzen und Plenen des ZK

Teil 1: 1898 – 1917

282 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 22 €, ISBN 3-932636-76-7
Hardcover: Offenbach 2004, 47 €, ISBN 3-932636-77-5

Teil 2: 1917 – 1924

290 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 22 €, ISBN 3-932636-82-1
Hardcover: Offenbach 2004, 47 €, ISBN 3-932636-83-X

Teil 3: 1924 – 1927

300 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 22 €, ISBN 3-932636-84-8
Hardcover: Offenbach 2004, 47 €, ISBN 3-932636-85-6

Teil 4: 1927 – 1932

300 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 22 €, ISBN 3-932636-86-4
Hardcover: Offenbach 2004, 47 €, ISBN 3-932636-87-2

Teil 5: 1932 – 1953

340 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 22 €, ISBN 3-932636-88-0
Hardcover: Offenbach 2004, 47 €, ISBN 3-932636-89-9

Zur internationalen Lage 1919 – 1952

359 Seiten, Offenbach 2003, 25 €, ISBN 3-932636-71-6
Hardcover: Offenbach 2003, 50 €, ISBN 3-932636-78-3

Dokumente der Internationalen Roten Hilfe und der Roten Hilfe Deutschlands

593 Seiten, Offenbach 2003, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-66-X
Hardcover: Offenbach 2003, 60 €, ISBN 3-932636-81-3

Dokumente zum Studium der Palästina-Frage (1922 – 1948)

180 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 10 €, ISBN 3-932636-32-5
Hardcover: Offenbach 1997, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-59-7

Dokumente zum Studium des Spanischen Bürgerkriegs (1936 – 1939)

680 Seiten, Offenbach 1997, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-31-7
Hardcover: Offenbach 1997, 55 €, ISBN 3-932636-58-9

Indien und die Revolution in Indien

262 Seiten, Offenbach 2005, 20 €, ISBN 3-86589-039-3
Hardcover: Offenbach 2005, 45 €, ISBN 3-86589-040-7

Dokumente des Kampfes der Kommunistischen Partei Chinas gegen den modernen Revisionismus 1956 – 1966

Teil I: 1956 – 1963

346 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 28 €, ISBN 3-932636-44-9
Hardcover: Offenbach 2002, 53 €, ISBN 3-932636-62-7

Teil II: Die Polemik über die Generallinie der internationalen kommunistischen Bewegung (1963)

330 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 28 €, ISBN 3-932636-45-7
Hardcover: Offenbach 2002, 53 €, ISBN 3-932636-63-5

Teil III: 1963 – 1966

320 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 25 €, ISBN 3-932636-46-5

Hardcover: Offenbach 2002, 50 €, ISBN 3-932636-64-3

Dokumente des Kampfes der Partei der Arbeit Albanien gegen den modernen Revisionismus 1955 – 1966

Teil I: 1955 – 1962

418 Seiten, Offenbach 2003, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-68-6

Hardcover: Offenbach 2003, 55 €, ISBN 3-932636-79-1

Teil II: 1963 – 1966

422 Seiten, Offenbach 2003, 30 €, ISBN 3-932636-69-4

Hardcover: Offenbach 2003, 55 €, ISBN 3-932636-80-1

Dokumente des ZK der KPD 1933 – 1945

505 Seiten, Offenbach 2001, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-41-4

Hardcover: Offenbach 2001, 50 €, ISBN 3-932636-57-0

Materialien zur Gründung der SED (1945/46)

Band 1: Berichte und Protokolle

Die Parteitage der KPD, SPD und SED im April 1946

319 Seiten, Offenbach 2001, 25 €, ISBN 3-932636-40-6

Hardcover: Offenbach 2001, 50 €, ISBN 3-932636-53-8

Band 2: Vortragsdispositionen (1945 – 1946)

Materialien für politische Schulungstage, herausgegeben vom ZK der KPD

250 Seiten, Offenbach 2001, 20 €, ISBN 3-932636-39-2

Hardcover: Offenbach 2001, 45 €, ISBN 3-932636-54-6

Band 3: Einheit (1946)

Einheit – Monatsschrift zur Vorbereitung der sozialistischen Einheitspartei,

Einheit – Theoretische Monatsschrift für Sozialismus

380 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 28 €, ISBN 3-932636-42-2

Hardcover: Offenbach 2002, 53 €, ISBN 3-932636-55-4

Band 4:

Alexander Abusch: Der Irrweg einer Nation (1946)

Georg Rehberg: Hitler und die NSDAP in Wort und Tat (1946)

Walter Ulbricht: Die Legende vom „deutschen Sozialismus“ (1945)

Paul Merker: Das dritte Reich und sein Ende (1945)

540 Seiten, Offenbach 2002, 35 €, ISBN 3-932636-43-0

Hardcover: Offenbach 2002, 60 €, ISBN 3-932636-56-2

Band 5: Parteikonferenz der KPD am 2. und 3. März 1946

160 Seiten, Offenbach 2004, 10 €, ISBN 3-86589-003-2

Hardcover: Offenbach 2004, 35 €, ISBN 3-86589-008-3

Verlag Olga Benario und Herbert Baum
Postfach 10 20 51, D-63020 Offenbach www.verlag-benario-baum.de